

Waste containers stay on streets for another year

But their numbers keep dropping as customers opt out

By LEE CAHILL

Exclusive to The Virginia Beach Sun

Businesses in the resort strip area of the city along the oceanfront have been given a reprieve from a city council budget decision to discontinue all city provided commercial waste management services.

By an 8-2 vote, council decided to continue to provide the services in the resort area through Sept. 30, 1994 at an increase to the existing rates charge of 25 percent.

But even with the increase, City Manager James K. Spore said the city will be subsidizing the $537,200 service by nearby $182,500. Although the Public Works Department indicated it can absorb the cost for an additional season, beyond that, additional resources would be needed, according to Spore.

The number of resort-area customers has dropped from 200 to 90 since May. If the number drops below 75 sites, the city will permanently discontinue service with a 90-days-notice to customers.

Councilmember Robert K. Dean, who voted against the ordinance, objected to limiting the service to the resort area. He said that residents pay $2.69 per container for one container pickup a week, while at the Oceanfront, businesses pay 83 cents per container, with a maximum of six containers per business.

Spore said that the lesser costs are attributed to the small number of crews needed to cover the area, and a four-hour work day.

The Resort Leadership Council requested the change because of the area's unique situation — the closeness of buildings in the area makes it difficult to use dumpsters.

Councilmember Linwood Branch, who abstained from the voting, said that it's better not to have dumpsters everywhere with the accompanying overflow and smells. He said that the interim measure of continuing the service will buy some time for the city to entertain bids. He said he also plans to enter an ordinance to regulate dumpsters.

Councilmember John D. Moss, who also voted against the change in plans, said that it looks like something that will come back with a tax attached.

Mayor Meyera Oberdorf, however, said that she sees it as a matter of public health safety. According to Oberdorf, one thing the resort city has been complimented about is its cleanliness.

Dean said that if the city is going to apply standards at the Oceanfront, it should do so in the whole city.

After Sept. 30, 1994, the city has two options, Spore said: to provide the service with the commercial community paying the entire cost; or to contract with a private hauling company to provide the service.

When the city rebids the master solid waste contract next May, it is expected that the resort area service would be added to the contract.

Male sex assault victims in focus

By FAYE LEE

Special to The Virginia Beach Sun

Until recently, little attention has been given to sexual assault of males. Many professionals who work with victims of this crime believe it is too often underreported.

Male victims are more likely than their female counterparts to seek treatment of physical trauma without reporting the sexual assault, because males are more likely to be beaten than females during a rape, according to a 1980 study by Groth and Burgess.

Response Sexual Assault Support Services, the rape crisis center in southside Hampton Roads, now in its 19th year of operation, is sponsoring a conference "Male Sexual Abuse - Ending the Denial,"

October 8 at the Holiday Inn, 725 Woodlake Dr., Chesapeake, from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m.

The conference will be led by Mic Hunter, an internationally recognized authority on the issue of male victims of sexual abuse. The morning session will be intensive, with interdisciplinary training for intermediate to advanced professionals. The afternoon session will include professionals and the general public.

Cyclists finally finish trip

By CARLA ISAACSON

Exclusive to The Virginia Beach Sun

"No sir, I'm staying off that bridge," quipped Blackhawk Walters when asked if he was starting the 20 mile bike ride to Virginia Beach from the opposite side of Gilmerston Bridge.

Walters was a member of The Virginia Beach Firefighters Cycling Team which pedaled across country last summer to raise money for The International Burn Foundation.

They did not quite make it that day. Twenty miles from their destination point in Virginia Beach two of the cyclists, Walters and Riley, crashed.

Their 3,100 mile trip came to a halt on the Gilmerston Bridge which spans the Elizabeth River between Portsmouth and Chesapeake.

It had rained earlier that day and according to Riley they were caught by surprise on the slippery roads. Clipping along at about 23 mph, "pretty soon my bike was out of control, and I was on the ground."

Riley broke his left ring finger and ripped off the nail bud which had to be reconstructed. He suffered from road abrasions to his upper torso and a bruised shoulder.

To avoid being run over by an oncoming car, Walters stopped his slide by catching the bridge's railing with his right hand. His hand was split down the middle, between his ring finger and middle finger. His thumb was dislocated in two places and the ligaments in it were torn and had to be reattached.

The Chesapeake Fire Department had given them an escort that day so one lane of traffic had been blocked off on the bridge. "Thank God for the Chesapeake Fire Department," said Riley. "They saved us from getting run over."

Both men went through extensive physical therapy and are doing well.

King Neptune XX met them at the oceanfront, and congratulated them on their successful completion of a trip long overdue.

"We have no regrets over the injuries," said Riley. "We just have to shed light on what we rode for." The team raised $5,000 for the Burn Foundation, for which donations are still trickling in.

"We did it because it was a great cause," said Walters. "As firemen we see people getting burned in fires. Many hospitals do not have the facilities to care for these victims."

According to Walters, hospitals need burn beds to care for victims, and the Burn Foundation puts those special beds in hospitals.

"Burn victims require a lot of special treatment," Riley said. "They need emotional as well as physical care. The Burn Foundation places emphasis on post-burn care."

Donations for the fund can be sent to: The International Burn Foundation, 105 North Plaza Trail, Suite B-3, Virginia Beach, Va., 23452.

Candidates hear questions

Candidates for the General Assembly, House Districts 21, 81-85, 87 and 90 from Virginia Beach will participate in a luncheon forum sponsored by the Hampton Roads Chamber of Commerce-Virginia Beach.

The event is scheduled for noon Monday at the Radisson Hotel in Virginia Beach. Questions will be asked of the candidates on one or two of the following topics: the budget, higher education, transportation, corrections and employment law.

The forum, third in a series of Quarterly Membership Meetings sponsored by the Chamber, will be moderated by Kay A. Kemper, vice president of University Relations at Old Dominion University. Networking begins at 11:30 a.m. The forum and lunch will begin at noon.

Chamber members may obtain tickets for $12.50, non-members for $17.50 by contacting Michele Arthur at the Virginia Beach division office, 490-1223.

Costs mount on track site

Exclusive to The Virginia Beach Sun

The city is spending $1,629,980, or $29,636 per acre, for 55 acres of undeveloped land for the future construction of the Southeastern Expressway as part of an agreement with Churchill Downs, Inc. to develop a horse racing track. The alignment for the highway has not been established however, and whether the highway will be constructed at all is still in question.

Purchase of the property from the Taylor Group is contingent upon the city being awarded a license from the state Racing Board for development of a race track. A decision on the track is due in early 1994.

"Sweetpea" feted by city council as a role model

Exclusive to The Virginia Beach Sun

Virginia Beach's adopted son Pernell "Sweetpea" Whitaker, "bound-for-pound the greatest boxer in the world," was honored with a resolution and a standing ovation by city council at this week's council meeting for serving as "an ambassador for the city and an exemplary role model for our youth."

Whitaker, an Olympic gold medalist, said it was great to be a citizen of Virginia Beach and to be in the Neptune Festival Parade over the weekend. Whitaker was born and raised in Norfolk but now makes his home in Virginia Beach.

The resolution unequivocally states that "most recently, on September 10, 1993, he defeated, to all those who witnessed the fight, Julio Cesar Chavez, who until that time held a perfect 87-0 record and this victory was recognized by a nation of boxing fans even though the fight was ruled a majority draw."

To which, Whitaker smiling, nodded in agreement.

United Way

Labels.
Everybody has a label.
Some labels bear soft images like, blue-eyed blond, or brown-eyed ebony.
But some other labels are hard and offer only feelings of fear.

Homeless.
Latch-key.
Mentally handicapped.
Terminally ill.
Battered and abused.
When it seems there's no safe place or no one willing to share a word of comfort, it can be easy to despair, especially if one of those labels is your identity.

But with some significant measure of solace, the individuals who make up the donors, volunteers and staff of the United Way of South Hampton Roads and its 69 member agencies, offer safe places for those in need, and the willingness of strangers to step in with words and deeds to make things better.

The national United Way has been struggling with a public relations nightmare for the past couple of years in the wake of findings that its one-time top officer overused his privileges, and in doing so, abused the reputation of this very worthwhile philanthropic organization.

Unfortunately, and somewhat unjustly, during its two most recent fundraising campaigns, donations to the local South Hampton Roads United Way have been significantly affected by that scandal. Consequently, agencies in our community funded by the United Way have had to scale back and even eliminate some of the services they provide.

The harm done by fewer donations, however, has little affect in the national offices of the United Way. The harm done is to Edmarc, the hospice for terminally ill children, which can't offer as many Camp Magic weekends for the youngsters it helps. The harm done is to Hope House which can't provide a counselor to a mentally handicapped adult trying to learn independent living skills. And, the harm done grows in proportion to the number of donations not given.

The United Way has launched its new campaign and is asking for your generous support. It's estimated that one in five people in South Hampton Roads benefits in some way through an agency affiliated with the United Way.

But there can be just as sweet an enjoyment in the benefit of giving. Consider it strongly. — J.P.

Tell the world

(at least our little corner of it)

One of the most important days in a person's life is culminated with the short phrase, "I do." One's wedding day, and the day of the proposal, remain a cherished memory in thought, word and print.

The editorial staffs of The Chesapeake Post, The Virginia Beach Sun and The Portsmouth Times recognize the understandable joy and pride which accompanies these two occasions and the desire to tell all your friends. But it can be difficult when friends and relatives are spread throughout such a densely populated area as Hampton Roads.

There is an alternative to running up phone bills or paying for expensive, and brief, wedding and engagement notices in The Virginian-Pilot. (After all, a wedding is usually an expensive enough proposition). The lifestyles pages in the Chesapeake Post, Virginia Beach Sun and Portsmouth Times would gladly publish your engagement notice and picture and your wedding announcement and picture free of charge.

There is no complicated or impersonal form to fill out; in fact you can write it yourself. As a community newspaper, and that is what we are — a newspaper for your community — we have a deep commitment to make our pages available for news and information from our readers.

So if you, or someone in your family, has just gotten engaged or married, let us help you tell the world — or at least our little corner of it. And we won't charge you a dime. — J.W.B.

Why spend the money?

Recently my wife and I had the occasion to attend the wedding of a friend, something we do from time to time.

As we sat in the church (as it turned out, the same one where my wife and I were hitched) waiting for the blessed/dreaded event, I got to pondering on the subject of weddings and funerals. The two seem to go hand-in-hand somehow.

Remembering our union, I recalled the cost. Her gown, paying the preacher, renting the reception hall, renting the tuxedo (for which I had to borrow shoes which turned out to be five sizes too big) the gifts, rehearsal dinner, etc. I was amazed at how much our little wedding cost.

It was thousands of dollars. Not that it came out of my pocket, or not much of it, but that is a lot of money for most folks.

I got to wondering, why spend all that money for something which only takes about 30 minutes? I realize people want a special moment to remember, but for thousands of dollars?

The dress would only be worn once. The tuxedo went back the next day. Bridesmaids now had dresses that would never be worn again.

Yes, the participants have a good time and maybe that makes the expense worthwhile. Maybe I'm just not a sentimental person. But I remember my now mother-in-law stating after the wedding that she would rather have given us the money than go through the hassles of arranging everything.

I immediately thought, or I may have said it aloud to her, 'Why didn't you say so in the first place.'

I think I would rather have had the cash. Sure, the presents were nice and it was an interesting experience, but the money would have been nicer. Then we could have bought the presents we really needed and done away with some of the clinkers we received.

Money is not everything and cannot buy happiness, some people say. And if the ceremony and much means that much to the couple, and not to their families, then by all means spend the money. But the cash certainly would be helpful as a couple starts out a new life together.

For some reason, weddings all

A closer look at welfare uncovers assumed myths

According to Daniel Stone, director of the Virginia Beach Department of Social Services, the department generated over $97 million in 1992.

The Mayor's Report

Mayor Meyera Oberndorf

Only $4.5 million of this amount came from local tax dollars. The other money came from the state and the federal government.

The $93.5 million that came into the city because of the cause of entitlement programs such as Medicaid, Aid to Dependent Children, Food Stamps, Fuel Assistance, etc., went largely to support and bolster the Virginia Beach economy.

Property owners, grocery stores, doctors, hospitals, pharmacists, clothing stores, car dealers, local taxes, etc., all benefit directly from these dollars. The rippling effect of these dollars is astronomical. Any other business in a community that generated this amount of money would be praised and courted by the power brokers. The business would be seen as a valuable asset to the community.

Yet, this is not true with public welfare. The concept of providing entitlement programs for the poor is resented and seen by most citizens as a burden on the community.

These days, criticizing welfare and ridiculing welfare recipients seem to be a national pastime. Everybody has ideas of how the system should be changed and most Americans think that public welfare is a major contributor to the national debt. They resent their tax dollars being spent to support "lazy, irresponsible individuals" whose only problem is that they want a handout, not a hand-up.

In the winter of 1992, Daniel O. Huff, professor of social work at Boise State University in Idaho, wrote an article for the Public Welfare Journal. He titled his article, "Upside-Down Welfare."

This is another view of social welfare in America and dispels much of the misinformation about the welfare system. According to Dr. Huff, "Americans spend vast amounts on welfare each year, but less than ten percent goes to poor people."

Most people would immediately dispute this statement. However, it all depends on how we define "welfare."

If we view "welfare" as a government subsidy, it is easy to see who gets the most in government subsidies. It is the programs that serve middle and upper income citizens. Programs like tax breaks for investments, tax breaks for vacation homes, subsidized medical care, even Social Security, Medicaid, and college tuition are all subsidized by the government, and could technically be called "welfare."

The Savings and Loan fiasco is perhaps the most blatant form of a government subsidy. The general accounting office estimates that it will cost American taxpayers over $500 billion to rescue the Savings and Loan industry. This gigantic welfare program is being borne by taxpayers with little protest, even though it was clearly criminal behavior that contributed to the downfall of this industry.

A little publicized "welfare" program that takes the largest chunk of our tax dollars is a set of programs designed to redistribute wealth to American businesses. Though this new category of welfare is not called "welfare," it represents an immense redistribution of our national wealth and may explain why so little has been done for poor people over the past decade.

It all depends on perspective. Tax breaks, uncollected personal taxes and fringe benefits are the welfare programs for the middle and upper middleclass in our country. Yet it is the entitlement programs to the poor that is the object of controversy.

The United States, more than any other social welfare country, seems intent on "victimizing" people who are already victims. Perhaps it is because the poor have no lobbyist, no collective voice and often cannot defend themselves.

Because I firmly believe that understanding and knowledge are powerful tools, I would like to use the rest of this column to address some well-known misconceptions about the public welfare system and the citizens who are the recipients of the entitlement programs.

Perhaps the most commonly held belief is that the more children one has, the more money one is able to get from the welfare system. In fact, the reality is that in the state of Virginia, if a mother is receiving Aid to Dependent Children for one child, she gets $231 per month. The maximum amount that an ADC mother/father can receive is $435 per month, even if she/he has twenty children.

Another belief is that "welfare" families are large families. The 1992 characteristics study published by the Virginia Department of Social Services says that the average family on public welfare has two children.

Many people believe that the cycle of welfare is never broken and that once a family gets on welfare they stay in the system forever. In 1989, a study by the College of William and Mary stated that the average length of time a family stays on welfare in Virginia is three years.

People believe that welfare clients are uneducated and virtually illiterate. Statistics reveal that 52 percent of the citizens of Virginia Beach who are on welfare have completed high school. Eight percent have attended college and one percent have completed college.

Food stamps are another entitlement program which receives a great deal of bad press. A common belief is that one can get rich off of food stamps. This is true only for criminals or unscrupulous merchants who prey on the poor. The maximum food stamp allotment for two people is $193 per month. For eight people, the allotment is approximately $634 and each additional family member over eight years of age receives approximately $78 per month in food stamps.

Another belief is that one can buy everything from toilet paper to a Cadillac with food stamps. This is not true. Food stamps cannot be used for non-food items like toilet paper, deodorant, toothpaste, pet food, tobacco, soap, aspirin, etc.

These are but a few of the many myths about public welfare. Perhaps Michael Harrington in his book "The Other America" sums it up best. "There's a fundamental paradox of the welfare state that it is not built for the desperate, but for those who are already capable of helping themselves. As long as the illusion persists that the poor are merely freeloading on the public, so long will the 'Other America' continue unthreatened. The truth, it must be understood, is the exact opposite. The poor get less out of the welfare state than any other group in America."

Refuge closes for annual hunts

The Back Bay National Wildlife Refuge will close to the general public from Saturday October 2 through Saturday, October 9 and again Sunday October 3 for an annual deer/hog hunt.

According to Refuge Manager Anthony D. Leger, the closure is necessary to ensure public safety. False Cape State Park, located south of the refuge, will also be closed during this time, for a similar hunt.

Sixty-two hunters are permitted to hunt on each of the seven hunt days. The first day of the hunt will be open to archery hunting only and the remaining days will be open for shotgun only.

Those hunters who were selected by the computer lottery have already been notified by mail. Individuals who were not selected in the computer lottery for this year's hunt, may still attempt to participate by arriving at the refuge between 4 a.m. and 5 a.m. on each morning of the hunt for the standby lottery. Gates will close at 5 a.m. and no one will be allowed in after that time. Standby slots will be available if selected hunters do not arrive by 5 a.m. or if slots were not filled during the computer lottery.

U.S. Supreme Court has tough challenge interpreting Constitution

On Monday, October 4, the U.S. Supreme Court will begin a new term with a new look.

Lil's Quill

Lillian Youell, board member, Virginia Consortium for Law-Related Education.

As Ruth Bader Ginsburg joins Sandra Day O'Connor, there will be two women justices on the high court for the first time in our nation's history. But their responsibility is the same as that of the seven men on the Court—to make decisions based on their understanding of the U.S. Constitution.

Central to American political life is the proper role of the federal government in the affairs of its citizens and the states. The search continues for the proper balance between the needs of the government and the rights of individuals.

The Supreme Court's decisions in such critical areas as abortion, pornography, rights of accused, questions of free speech, freedom of religion, have often been as controversial as the issues themselves. The Court is not infallible and has occasionally reversed itself.

As newspaper columnist James J. Kilpatrick wrote recently, "seven very mortal men and two very mortal women will look earnestly at the Constitution and will say bindingly to the nation: No matter what the Constitution meant in the past, this is what it means today."

From the nation's formative years, there has been a periodic debate over the proper method of interpreting the U.S. Constitution. Thomas Jefferson advocated a strict and narrow reading, and asserted that the government can do only those things the Constitution says it can do. Alexander Hamilton had a more flexible view that government could do everything except what it is expressly forbidden by the Constitution.

Later, Chief Justice John Marshall adopted Hamilton's argument, explaining the necessity of broad interpretation to allow the Constitution to meet the country's changing needs. Still, the debate continues today between original intent and interpretation.

Marchers will tramp for heart disease

Thousands of Hampton Roads citizens will walk all over cardiovascular diseases during the American Heart Walk Saturday, Oct. 2, 1993 at 8 a.m. at Mt. Trashmore Park in Virginia Beach.

The American Heart Association's "American Heart Walk" is a national event sponsored by Lederle Laboratories held in communities across the country during the first weekend in October. It's co-sponsored in Tidewater by Sentara Health System and WVEC-TV 13.

The non-competitive, just-for-fun event is expected to draw participants of all ages. Walkers will raise money for cardiovascular research by asking friends and co-workers for contributions for walking the course.

"We're excited about this event," said Rich Warden, event chairman. "Cardiovascular diseases, including stroke, are America's number one killer. They affect people in their 30s, 40s and 50s, often their most productive years. And children aren't excluded from cardiovascular diseases, either. There are only two ways to fight them: finding the cure through research and preventing them in the first place."

"We'll have lots of information at the American Heart Walk on how to help prevent cardiovascular diseases and stroke, including getting the regular exercise that helps strengthen your heart muscle," Warden said.

Each walker raising $75 will get an American Heart Walk t-shirt and will be eligible for prizes for raising money to fight cardiovascular diseases.

Sentara Health Systems will be hosting a Wellness Fair following the walk, including fitness screenings and heart-healthy exhibits.

Refreshments will be provided to the walkers. Registration begins at 8 a.m. with the walk starting at 9 a.m.

For information on how to participate or sponsor a walker, call the Tidewater office of the American Heart Association at 671-8636.

ways make me think of funerals, too. To me, the association is natural."

Certainly a funeral is one ceremony designed to make the survivors feel better. But I have never understood why many thousands of dollars are spent on a box, even if it is to be the final resting place for the deceased for eternity.

But, with no insensitivity intended, the person is dead and gone and cannot care at all about their final disposition. Some people pre-plan their funeral and insist on the fancy trappings. If so, OK. If, however, it is being left up to the survivor, I believe the money could be better spent on other expenses which crop up.

People have got to stop being so extravagant because, "my, oh my, what would our friends and relatives think of us if we just get a plain pine box — economy version?"

Who cares what they think? More than likely, the deceased would say the same thing. A bare bones funeral, no sun intended, could be just as comforting and meaningful to the survivors.

I, for one, hope my family fully recognizes my frugality in life and respects my wishes for my last frugal act to be a cheap going-away-to-do. In fact, if they plan to spend such a large sum to put me in the ground or even, let's spend the money now on a big wake while I'm living. Then I could get some enjoyment out of it, too.

To spend or not to spend, that is the question? I think "not" makes more cents.

and other talk shows. He should be ashamed of himself.

Even if my mother had molested me I damn sure wouldn't be telling it on a TV talk show. In my opinion, Berendzen's book does nothing to help in the prevention of child abuse and shouldn't be represented as such. Welcome to the real world.

Local student sets sights skyward as military pilot

By DAVID WINTON

Special to The Virginia Beach Sun

A Wolfenbarger Crescent teen says she would rather fly planes than shuttles, just like her dad.

Kimberly Lichtenberg, 16, daughter of former NASA payload specialist Byron Lichtenberg, recently completed her fourth session at the U.S. Space Camp in Huntsville, Alabama.

During her two-week stay, Lichtenberg spent a week training in the Aviation Challenge program. Her father flew on shuttle missions in 1983 and 1991. The biomedical engineer has lectured frequently at Space Camp.

Lichtenberg said she wouldn't mind flying in space like her dad, but that isn't a priority right now. Her immediate career goal is to become a military pilot, she said. Her father was an Air Force pilot, and, "he inspired me to fly."

Kimberly Lichtenberg operates the remote arm aboard a shuttle simulator during her Charlie Mission in the Level II Space Academy program.

Gifted high school students sought

By JANIE CRAIG

Special to The Virginia Beach Sun

The Virginia Department of Education is seeking applications for the 1994 Virginia Summer Residential Governor's School Program.

The governor's schools, in operation since 1973, allow academically and artistically gifted high school sophomores and juniors to spend four summer weeks at a college in Virginia. The programs include intensive study, hands-on experience, field trips, research projects and discussions with noted scholars.

Separate Governor's school programs are offered in the humanities, science, and fine arts. In addition, mentorship programs are available for students to work side-by-side with researchers at NASA Langley Research Center in Hampton, the Virginia Institute of Marine Science in Gloucester, and the Medical College of Virginia in Richmond. Fees for room, board and academic course work are paid for by the Virginia Department of Education.

The programs are offered to identify gifted students enrolled in Virginia public and private high schools. The number of academic nominees from a particular locality is determined by school enrollment. Effort is made to ensure equitable participation by race and gender.

Students may be nominated by teachers, guidance counselors, peers or by themselves. A school division selection committee picks the nominees from each locality. The Virginia Department of Education selects the final group of 650 students. Auditions are required for participants in the visual and performing arts program.

For an application for the 1994 Summer Residential Governor's School Program, students should contact a high school guidance counselor, principal, headmaster, local gifted coordinator, or contact Programs for the Gifted, Virginia Department of Education, P.O. Box 2120, Richmond, VA, 23216-2120 or call 1-371-6880.

Local schools collect data for impact aid eligibility

Millions of dollars in federal impact aid are available to area school divisions. Federal money is given directly to each school division to be spent on their individual needs.

In order to receive the money, schools must submit accurate data on those students, K-12, who reside on federal property or whose parents work on federal property. Data are collected on a federal card.

During the month of October all school children in Hampton Roads will bring home a federal card.

Parents are encouraged to complete, sign and return the cards to their children's schools. With this type of community cooperation, we can continue to provide quality education for all children.

For more information about the distribution and collection of federal cards, parents may contact individual schools or their public information office. In Virginia Beach call 427-4373; in Chesapeake 547-1033; and, in Portsmouth 393-8743.

Police ask public's help in tracking down robbers

By DET. G.L. WHEELER
Special to The Virginia Beach Sun

An armed robbery in Virginia Beach at a fast-food restaurant in April has not been solved. Detectives are asking for help in identifying a composite of one of the men responsible.

On Sat., April 17, 1993, at midnight, the McDonald's Restaurant on Indian River Rd. at McDonald Road had closed. A few minutes later an employee checked the restrooms and was confronted by two men with pistols. The armed men demanded money from the manager and forced everyone into the walk-in refrigerator.

The man police are looking for is described as black, in his 20s, about 5 feet 10 inches tall, with a medium build, about 180 pounds, dark complexion and a gold front tooth with a star in the middle. He was wearing a purple hooded sweatshirt.

The other robber was also black, in his 20s, about 5 feet 8 inches tall, with a thin build, dark complexion and a thin mustache.

Lucky patients will receive special visit during Yuletide

By STACEY KRAFT
Special to The Virginia Beach Sun

Kimberly Quality Care employees are sponsoring the third annual "Home for the Holidays" contest that will brighten the Christmas holidays for several southside Hampton Roads residents.

The employees are organizing fund-raising efforts and soliciting the support and contributions of area businesses to provide happy holidays for as many area residents as the raised funds will allow.

The winners of the contest will receive home health care services, supplies and medical equipment necessary to bring a family member home for the Christmas holidays.

Those eligible to "come home" must be confined to an area hospital or residing in a nursing home or other long-term care facility, have no home health care coverage, have the approval of their attending physician, and have a strong desire to spend Christmas at home with family in southside Hampton Roads.

The goal of "Home for the Holidays" is to bring families together that would otherwise spend Christmas apart because of needed, often expensive, medical care.

The employees of Kimberly Quality Care know how important it is to bring families together during the holiday season, as the contest has proven over the past two years with its' many winners.

Alma Kochol, formerly from Sentara Nursing Home in Norfolk, and Estelle Jones, from Chesapeake, are two of the contest previous winners and are the greatest success stories of Kimberly's "Home for the Holidays" contest. Both ventilator-dependent patients who had previously been unable to leave their health-care setting, traveled home for the holidays with the assistance of the contest. Both are now in home settings, and Kochol is ventilator-free.

Local businesses providing contributions to make this year's contest possible are: Kempville Branch 99 Fleet Reserve, Pak Mail, ABC Printing, Roberts Home Medical, ACE Home Care, The Spirit of Norfolk, Mercury Tidewater Ambulance Service, LPR Limo Service, Surf Rider Restaurant, Northwest Airlines and Norfolk Paramedic.

To enter the contest, families should write a brief letter, no more than two pages, to: Kimberly Quality Care, 4801 Columbus St., Suite 301, Virginia Beach, Virginia 23462. Attention: "Home for the Holidays" Contest.

Explain your particular situation and why you would like to be selected. All letters must be received by October 15. Winners will be announced by Kimberly Quality Care during National Home Health Care Week, November 28 through December 4. All individual winners will be notified in person.

Alleged murderer gives fake ID

By LOU THURSTON
Special to The Virginia Beach Sun

Police investigators have learned that the man arrested for the murder of 3-year-old Mario C. Wells on Sept. 14, 1993, gave a false identity when questioned and arrested. The man, originally identified as Kenneth Pendarvis, is actually Antoine D. Poarch, age 23.

After receiving information that Pendarvis may not have been the suspect's correct name, investigators compared fingerprints of Pendarvis with those on file under the name Poarch and determined them to be the same.

Poarch could possibly face the charge of giving false information to a police officer in addition to warrants found to be on file in Virginia Beach charging him with possession of a firearm by a convicted felon and a capias charging violation of probation.

In addition, there is a failure to appear warrant on file in Norfolk, a violation of probation warrant on file in Richmond, and a grand larceny of auto warrant on file in Arlington.

Poarch remains in the Virginia Beach Correctional Center without bond.

"C'mon baby. Ya can do it baby. Get down, get down . . . cover up. Can't win by runnin'."

"Don't cut 'em no slack Bubba." "Go, Grover . . . smack 'em side his head . . . don't wait, don't wait baby . . . whoooooop . . . that's the way Grover . . . you got 'em now."

The scene was the twice monthly Saturday night amateur fights at the Elks Lodge 82 on London Boulevard in Portsmouth.

An estimated crowd of 300 men, women and children cheered, booed, chuckled and 'whoofed-whoofed' through 17 boxing matches pitting the not-so-good, the pretty bad, and the definitely ugly in area and out-of-town amateur pugilists against one another.

"This is good, this is real good sport," said the well-known South Hampton Roads dean of sports writers Abe Goldblatt.

Goldblatt has been the driving force in keeping local amateur boxing in front of the public eye.

"You know, boxing is the most criticized sport in the world, but nothing attracts the attention of the whole wide world like a championship bout."

Goldblatt has had more than just a reporter's association with the boxing world. Most folks give him credit for dubbing World Welterweight boxing champ and hometown hero Pernell Whitaker "Sweetpea."

"I guess he was about 11 or 12 years old," Goldblatt said, "and I saw this little wiry kid coming out of the gym, and I yelled out 'hey sweet Pete.' But somebody thought I said 'Sweetpea' and it stuck. Pete had a lot of class as a youngster and he's got a lot of class as a young man."

The bouts at the Portsmouth Elks Club are sanctioned by the Virginia State Athletic Board and the U. S. Boxing Association. Doug Beavers, one of the judges at the Portsmouth bout, is the director of the state board and is also chairman of the Rankings Committee for the International Boxing Association — the powerful group which determines who's the number one boxer in each weight classification.

According to Goldblatt, about 100 boxers sign up, on average, for the Portsmouth fights. But not everyone gets into the ring.

"All the boxers are examined by a doctor and, if the doc says it okay for them to fight, then they're matched by weight and experience."

The Portsmouth fights attract rank amateurs plodding into the ring for the first time, novices with less than 10 fights, and open fighters with 10 or more matches under their belts.

Although most of the fights in Portsmouth went the full three rounds allotted to amateur bouts, a couple of the boxers got themselves disqualified for 'talking trash.'

"The ref won't stand for that," said timekeeper Louis Latham. "Now, they could be talking about their favorite poet up there, 'cept they probably aren't, still the ref says 'you're outta here, and out they go.'"

of 300 men, women and children cheered, booed, chuckled and
'whoofed-whoofed' through 17 boxing matches pitting the not-so-good, the pretty bad.

On this particular Saturday night, the fighters weighed in between two 12-year-olds at 85 very lightweight pounds, to the super-heavyweights who appeared more suited for Sumo wrestling than boxing. Some had the style of windmills, with arms circling to land a punch. Two Afro-American fighters, both thin as rails, looked like two brown rubber bands snapping and popping at each other.

A couple of the fighters gave new meaning to that item of male under apparel, the boxer short. With one or two inches of their panties showing beneath the legs of their boxing shorts, making a fashion statement in the ring didn't seem to be a priority for these guys.

The bouts attracted boxers from the U.S. Navy, Fort Eustis, the Alexandria (Va.) Boxing Club, the Hill City Athletic Club in Lynchburg, Virginia Tech, the Charles Moody Academy of Boxing out of Belle Meade, Md., the Jabbo Kenner Boxing Club also from Maryland, and the newly-formed Portsmouth Athletic Club.

In the featured bout of the evening, the PAC's Willie Wilder, a 27-year-old Portsmouth firefighter, went up against heavy-weight fighter, Francisco Logan, out of Fort Eustis.

It was a 'Willie crowd' all the way.

To say Wilder's footwork needs, well . . . work, is like saying a clock needs hands to tell its time.

But, in spite of his best, unbalanced efforts to trip himself right out of the ring, Wilder got the decision over Logan. And with his red-gloved fists held high, and a punched-out smile on his face, it wasn't hard to imagine Wilder's thoughts: 'Hey, I can take Tyson, no sweat!'

Class, not mass. That's who reads The Virginia Beach Sun, The Chesapeake Post and The Portsmouth Times!

Our discriminating readers are intelligent and affluent. They subscribe to our distinguished weeklies as a luxury, not a necessity. Ours is a select, mature readership audience, teeming with settled property owners who have disposable incomes and prefer to shop locally.

But, you may ask, why are community newspapers so popular? What makes them unique compared to the other media.

Simply stated, community newspapers are different. Our attitude is different. Our news coverage is different. Our priorities are different. And we have just as much pride and integrity as any daily newspapers, perhaps more!

Community newspaper readers are special - they know when they've had enough of, and can see through the dreary daily deluge of "bad" and "negative" news which often permeates the other media. With our "hometown" approach to community news coverage, we transcend ordinary news coverage to publish different and exciting newspaper, and also create an exclusive news and advertising marketplace.

Because of our readers' personal and financial stability and security, they tend to be longtime subscribers to our newspapers and instinctively support those businesses which support the community and its community newspaper. They have no trouble understanding that dollars spent locally in their community will return to them many times over, via a-vis, low tax rates, excellent public services and school systems, and modern recreational facilities. But most important, to you and us, local news that's fair, honest and objective.

Advertising

Advertising in community newspapers gives the advertiser all the focused benefits of direct mail, but absent the skyhigh costs. With us, your advertisements reach a select segment of an upscale, intelligent, target audience, i.e., local shoppers who financially and socially represent the "best" the community has to offer.

Our community newspapers are also more inclined than other media to be receptive in assisting your client or business obtain precious publicity. Simply send us your personal announcements, new contract and business acquisitions, expansion plans, or just call us with your general story ideas. For example, what are some of your top employees' more interesting hobbies? How have you and your business made it to the top? How does your business fit into the local market?

Finally, don't think of community newspapers as the "little" guys. Think of us as the other guys - the community newspapers.

Compliance with law could cost city $23 million

By LEE CAHILL

Exclusive to The Virginia Beach Sun

It would cost the city $23 million to make all of the city and school buildings, parks and school playgrounds and street intersections accessible to the city's disabled population.

Or that's what it will take to bring the city into compliance with the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990 that prohibits discrimination on the basis of disability.

David Grochmal, general services director who is the city's ADA compliance coordinator, in a report to City Council at a workshop Tuesday, brought the city up to date on what it needs to do to follow the federal mandate.

The city is considering allocations to follow the mandates — $25,000 a year is recommended in the proposed Capital Improvement Budget. Grochmal said, however, that the city is not in total compliance.

A break-down in the project cost shows that the schools would require $10 million; city buildings, $3.2 million; parks and school playgrounds $1.8 million, and street intersections $8 million.

He emphasized that the law does not require that every building be made accessible and that other methods of compliance are acceptable — such as making programs available at facilities which are accessible.

A sampling of some surrounding cities show that they are facing the same problems.

Although the total cost has not been determined in Norfolk, City Council there has approved $100,000 in Fiscal Year '93 funds, but requested no funds in Fiscal Year '94.

In Chesapeake, the total cost has not been determined and no capital funds have been allocated, but about $30,000 has been spent from the operating budget.

In Portsmouth the total cost has been estimated at $25 million and council approved $150,000 for Fiscal Year '93.

In Hampton, the total cost is estimated at $1.3 million and council approved $242,000 for Fiscal Year 1994.

In Newport News, the total cost is $2.2 million and council approved $478,000 for Fiscal Year '93.

Before frightening people with the $23 million figure, said Councilmember Robert K. Dean, he wanted to see more figures. Grochmal explained that the inspection people evaluated the buildings, not program people, and that the inspectors identified physical barriers. He said that he hoped to get the program and the inspection people together and come to the least expensive decision.

Councilmember John D. Moss asked what the city's legal risks are.

John Newhard, Jr., from the City Attorney's office, said that the disabled have a number of remedies although no criminal penalties are provided. He said the individuals can seek private lawsuits and sue for damage in Federal Court.

Grochmal said that in a year he would have a better assessment of the cost. He said that he hoped to meet with members of the disabled communities for input. Councilmember Robert K. Dean said that the issue should be looked at as a human rights issue. "The people have rights. They happen to be disabled. It's a very serious matter challenging council to look deep inside themselves to find money."

Kenneth W. Jessup, chairman of the Mayor's Committee for the Handicapped, with whom Grochmal has been working also, reported that the departments of the city are accessible to all citizens. The city agencies that deal directly with the public, he said, show a willingness to become accessible.

He also suggested the installation of assisting technology in each department and an audio descriptive video for the visually impaired on the city access TV channels, Cox Cable 28 and 29.

Hundreds of walkers joined in the American Heart Association's 'American Heart Walk' Saturday at the base of Mount Trashmore. The non-competitive wellness walk raised $25,000 which was used to fund the American Heart Association's community education and research to combat heart disease. The walk was held in communities across America.

After a brief warm-up, a few stretches, and a pep talk, about 400 walkers poured out of the starting gate at the base of Mount Trashmore Saturday to help stamp out cardiovascular diseases.

"A lot of people came out and enjoyed the exercise, and had a good time," said Jennifer Winstead, area director for the American Heart Association.

The 10-K non-competitive wellness walk was about preventing illness. Every walker who raised up to $75 received a T-Shirt. About 150 shirts were earned.

The first weekend of October is one time for the American Heart Association's national 'American Heart Walk' with about 500 events going on nationwide and sponsored by Lederle Laboratories. The local sponsor was Sentara Health System and all their area hospitals had entrants in the walk, according to Winstead.

The American Heart Association is on a mission to reduce disability and death from cardiovascular diseases and stroke by promoting the benefits of walking.

Walkers collected donations from co-workers, friends, and family members which were turned in at the 'Heart Walk' event. The American Heart Association's research and community education programs received the $25,000 that was raised.

The Sentara Health System arranged a Wellness Fair which included screening for blood pressure and stress, heart and health assessment, a bicycle ergometer test, and a nutritional counseling exhibit.

Changes in the state's formula for funding road construction would cost city millions

Council considers proposing that no alterations be made in plan

By LEE CAHILL

Exclusive to The Virginia Beach Sun

A proposal in Virginia Beach's legislative package may ask that no changes be made in the transportation allocation formulas — changes that could mean the loss of $10 to $15 million a year for Hampton Roads cities and counties.

The worst case scenario, according to Robert Mathias, the city's legislative liaison, would be for all formulas recommended by the Virginia Department of Transportation (VDOT) to go into effect.

Mathias presented the legislative package to City Council at a work session Tuesday when representatives of the Hampton Roads Planning District Commission (HRPDC) explained the recommendations and their effect on Hampton Roads.

The regional agency has included in its legislative agenda, endorsed by the Metropolitan Planning Organization, several recommendations:

- Calling for continuing the use of all existing allocation formulas — VDOT's change in the formula would send two cents per gallon gas tax to areas outside of Hampton Roads.

- Raising the gas tax seven cents per gallon. Five cents would be distributed under the existing formula while two cents would be made directly available to local governments for local transportation purposes.

- Preventing new revenue for construction from being diverted to maintenance.

HRPDC's Dwight Farmer said, "Traditionally the Transportation Trust Fund has been used for maintenance operation and construction, but in recent years increasingly greater proportions (resulting from more roads to maintain and greater costs) have been going toward maintenance and operation."

Consequently by Fiscal Year '95 no funds will be left in the fund to transfer to construction. He said a critical point will be reached in Fiscal Year '95 when the established operating fund — current law requires that maintenance be paid for off the top — will have no funds to transfer.

Under the changes recommended by VDOT, an increased proportion of funds will be going to the primary and secondary highway systems, reducing funding for the urban system from 30 to 25 percent.

Of the Hampton Roads communities, Virginia Beach would be the biggest loser with a $5.4 million reduction in the annual allocation, with Norfolk second with a loss of $3 million and Chesapeake next with a loss of $2 million. Portsmouth would lose $1,096,000.

With VDOT estimating maintenance costs will increase $40 million a year from FY '94 to FY '99 and no changes in the allocation formula, Hampton Roads stands to lose $4,650,000 in construction funds.

With the recommended change in the Trust Fund allocation for highways reduced from 85 percent to 78 percent, another $3,155,000 decrease would be added and the recommended change in the urban allocation from 30 to 25 percent and secondary allocation from 30 to 33 percent, another $8,186,000 would be lost.

The figures come from the Hampton Roads Planning District. "Very seldom is a primary highway located within a city," Farmer said. "Route 17 in Chesapeake is one of the few."

The present funding formula, established in 1985, allocates 40 percent for the primary system, 30 percent for the secondary system and 30 percent for the urban system.

The cut in the urban allocation, said Mathias, will affect Virginia Beach the most — at a time when the city is relying more on funds from the urban system to meet transportation needs.

Election plan now off November ballot

City Attorney Les Lilley announced September 30 that the Circuit Court of the City of Virginia Beach has entered an order which removes from the November ballot the referendum question proposing changes to the city's councilmatic electoral plan.

At its September 28 meeting, City Council voted 6-5 to request the city attorney to seek to remove the question from the ballot.

Earlier, on August 24, on a 6-4 vote, council had requested the question be placed on the ballot. The referendum question posed the issue of amending the city's charter to alter its councilmatic electoral plan.

This would generally be accomplished by combining the two least populous boroughs of Pungo and Blackwater into one borough, and splitting the most populous borough of Kempsville into two boroughs.

Mayor Meyera Oberndorf said, "Council's vote to remove the referendum question from the ballot came as a surprise. However, as the initial vote to place the issue before the voters was not unanimous, this will give the citizens and the Council an opportunity to work toward a plan that will be more acceptable to the Council and citizens of the city."

However, as the initial vote to place the issue before the voters was not unanimous, this will give the citizens and the Council an opportunity to work toward a plan that will be more acceptable to the Council and citizens of the city."

On that Friday morning, Shelley Hope Adams of the 900 block of Cardinal Rd., located in the Birdneck Point section of the city, was due to report to her 11th grade classes at Cox High School. Adams did not arrive at school.

On Wednesday, Sept. 22, Adams' mother, Suzanne Marden, received a call from her daughter at approximately 1 a.m. Adams indicated she was in New Jersey with some other individuals. Adams further indicated she would arrive here later that day.

Shelley Hope Adams has not been seen or heard from since. Adams' unknown whereabouts and failure to communicate with her family are somewhat suspicious.

Adams is described as a white female, 5'4" tall, 125 lbs., long blonde hair, blue eyes and medium complexion. She was last seen wearing a purple Indian print dress and a green sweatshirt. She also had a multicolored backpack in her possession.

Anyone having information on Shelley Hope Adams' whereabouts is asked to call Detective Pam O'Hagan of the Investigative Division's Missing Person/Runaway Squad at 427-4101.

Common tax date proposed

By RAY A. CONNER

Special to The Virginia Beach Sun

The adoption of a uniform business license tax payment date for the seven Hampton Roads area cities of Chesapeake, Norfolk, Virginia Beach, Portsmouth, Newport News, Suffolk and Hampton has been unanimously recommended by the respective commissioners of the revenue.

In a formal resolution signed by Ray A. Conner of Chesapeake, Sam T. Barfield of Norfolk, Robert B. Vaughan of Virginia Beach, C.B. Harrell, Jr. of Newport News, Ross A. Mugler of Hampton, A. James Fillion of Portsmouth, and Thomas A. Hazelwood of Suffolk, these seven commissioners of the revenue outline the advantages if all localities in the Hampton Roads area had the same business license payment date.

According to a release sent to area media outlets, the commissioners say many businesses in the Hampton Roads area have more than one location. "Contractors who do work throughout the area often have to purchase a business license in multiple cities. It is confusing for businesses to keep track of the various filing and payment dates."

"If all localities in this area had the same due date, it would help decrease the number of delinquencies. Less delinquencies saves money for the business community because of the reduction in penalties and interest."

"Less delinquencies will save time and effort in enforcement of the business license tax code by the respective staffs of the area commissioners of the revenue."

The current due dates for business license renewals for the area cities are: Hampton, Newport News, and Suffolk, Jan. 31; Chesapeake, Feb. 15; Norfolk, April 30; Portsmouth, May 31; and Virginia Beach, June 10.

The resolution signed by the seven commissioners of the revenue proposes a compromise date of March 1. With this uniform date, four cities would have their business license collection date moved back, while three cities would have it moved forward.

This compromise date would give businesses approximately 60 days in which to calculate their prior calendar year's gross receipts for filing purposes.

The business license tax is a significant revenue source for these cities. For fiscal year 1992-93, the collective amount of revenue generated from business licenses was more than $55 million dollars.

The resolution signed by the commissioners of the revenue calls for March 1 to be adopted as a uniform business payment due date for cities in the Hampton Roads area beginning in 1995.

This fall, the commissioners will be presenting the proposal to their respective city councils for the adoption of the necessary amendments to the city codes.

CROP Walk helps the hungry

By CARLA ISAACSON

Exclusive to The Virginia Beach Sun

Hundreds of walkers will walk all over hunger in the 20th Annual 10-K Walk for Hunger Oct. 17.

The event is being sponsored by the Portsmouth Area Resources Coalition Inc. at 442 Jamestown Ave. in Portsmouth in conjunction with the Church Rule Outreach Project.

The proceeds from the walk go to PARC, and in turn are used by the Shelter for Homeless Families to feed the hungry.

Last year, $18,000 was raised with about 300 walkers.

Katura Harvey, director of PARC, hopes for about 400 walkers this year. "On the day of the walk we are trying to heighten the awareness of hunger."

This year the host church is St. Christopher's Episcopal Church on Cedar Lane in Portsmouth. Every year a different church is selected to host the event.

Each congregation has walkers who get sponsors for their walk.

Rain or shine the walk goes on. According to Harvey, "The walk has never been rained out. As far as I know we have never had a rain date."

The walk starts at 2 p.m. beginning at Portside, circling through Olde Towne to the Naval Hospital, and then back to Portside. The walk should take about two hours. Registration tables will be set up on the day of the walk at 1:30 p.m.

There will also be registration packets at the PARC office Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., and at St. Christopher's Episcopal Church Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to noon.

CROP is an international organization that has affiliates all over the world.

The two primary programs at the international level are the National Council of the Churches of Christ and The Church World Service and Witness Unit.

Portsmouth receives 25 percent of the money raised. The remaining 75 percent goes abroad.

Ron and Joyce Black and family were among the 300 walkers in last year's 10-K walk for hunger which is scheduled this year for Oct. 17. Funds raised from the walk will go to the Shelter for Homeless Families.

sociation, said, "I don't think any (corrective action) is left off the list short of a nuclear attack on school districts."

At a meeting last summer of the American Educational Research Association, prominent educators filled the air with alarms that the Clintons' OBE standards, driven by assessments, might lead to a narrowing of the curriculum, and have a harmful effect on education, as in some European countries.

Virginians aren't accustomed to hearing that kind of talk from professional educators because their state education bureaucracy lovingly embraced OBE and in fact wants to help subsidize the national assessments that would drive it.

Goals 2000 is a Little Shop of Horrors of educational doctrine. It mandates equal graduation rates according to racial and ethnic group, which should be tipoff enough of what happens to individual intellectual distinction.

It endorses "developmentally appropriate" early-childhood practices elevating self-esteem over academic instruction.

It sets up a National Education Goals Panel, consisting entirely of politicians, to review standards, curricula, and tests promulgated by, in effect, a national school board. It also gives Robert Reich's DOL power to certify skills of a national workforce.

There's much more: school-based health and social-service clinics, a "parents as teachers" program that could intrude the state ever more deeply in family life, and, of course, "opportunity-to-learn" or delivery standards.

The latter provides an opening for Washington to tell each state how much it should spend per teacher, per-pupil, or per-building in the name of "equity."

In an article for the American School Board Journal in July, 1992, Reich called for mega-school districts, with the wealthier adopting the poorer, to bring that about.

Now, Lyndon Johnson's ESEA, which was designed to provide compensatory education to help poor students improve their basic skills, is to become a big stick to enforce New Age ed across the land.

Schools are the institution closest to the heart of most neighborhoods. Local control has been a cherished principle in American life. Statist control of curriculum is a pernicious trend, threatening liberty.

So why are so many people, including putative "conservatives" on Capitol Hill, sleeping through the coup d'etat?

Twenty-five Bristol-Myers Squibb Scholarships are awarded each year to children of regular, full-time U.S. employees. "This award means that all my hard work in high school has paid off. The scholarship will enable me to concentrate fully on my studies in college and achieve my goal of becoming a small town physician, neonatologist or pediatric oncologist," she adds.

Each scholarship covers completion of a bachelor's degree and four years of full-time study, whichever comes first. The minimum stipend is $1,000 per year, up to a maximum of $4,000 per year.

Teachers, system gain benefits from PRIDE and ALAS programs

The ALAS program takes the PRIDE program one step further and specifically asks a teacher, or teams of teachers, to study and devise a plan to accelerate the learning of students. Once this plan is in place, access to the professional growth account allows teachers to gain needed information and skills to carry out the accelerated learning plan.

At the end of the process, if students' learning has indeed been accelerated, the teacher or teachers would be eligible to accelerate one step on the salary scale.

How might an individual teacher participate in the PRIDE program? Here is one example. A high school chemistry teacher studied how much material was covered by her chemistry students over the last four years and she also looked at the number of A's, B's and C's that the students had earned. Two years ago, she had placed more emphasis on her chemistry labs and it looked to her that while she had not covered as much material that year, students did higher quality work and received better grades.

The difficulty that she had that year was never having enough time to really complete the experiments before the bell rang. She talked with an English teacher who needed a longer bell to help her students with writing. They both approached their assistant principal and asked if it would be possible to schedule a double bell in chemistry twice a week and a double bell in English twice a week.

This would allow students to attend chemistry three days a week and English three days a week but for two of those three days class would be twobells long. The chart below shows how a student's schedule would be set up.

STUDENT SCHEDULE:	MON.	TUES.	WED.	THURS.	FRI.
Bel 1	English	English	Chemistry	English	Chemistry
Bel 2	English	Chemistry	English	Chemistry	English

The assistant principal said that it would be possible since they could schedule the same students who were taking chemistry second bell in English class first bell. Both teachers agreed that they would study the situation further and after careful consideration the chemistry teacher decided to write up an ALAS proposal that outlined her goal to accelerate the learning of her chemistry students.

Her plan called for her to administer her semester tests for her one experimental class and her four regular chemistry classes.

She also planned to use a chemistry Regents' test from New York state for further assessment. She shared her plan with several chemistry teachers in other schools and they thought that if she could design really great chemistry lessons that her plan might really move her students ahead.

She wrote up her ALAS proposal and had it approved by her principal. She intended to use her professional growth account money to buy several chemistry lab books and spend two days in a college chemistry lab. She also would be visiting a chemistry teacher in Northern Virginia who had used a block schedule for several years with good success.

We will all find out next June if her chemistry students accelerated their learning. But reasonable people would agree that the money spent for this teacher's professional development was certainly focused on improving instruction and increased student learning.

Four schools will be selected to pilot the two programs next year. Some of the criteria that will be used to determine if the programs are successful will include improvements in work quality, accelerated student learning, higher levels of job satisfaction and a better return on scarce professional development dollars.

'Mob' question a hard one

Other questions come to mind. How did the attorneys determine that the students at the bowling alley met there unlawfully with the intention of committing assaults rather than bowling for fun? Why were only four charged when every person in the mob shared the guilt according to the following explanation of "maining by mob."

Code of Virginia (18.2-41): Shooting, stabbing, etc., with intent to maim, kill, etc. by mob. Any and every person composing a mob which shall maliciously or unlawfully shoot, stab, cut or wound any person, or by any means cause him bodily injury with intent to maim, disable, disfigure or kill him, shall be guilty of a Class 3 felony.

Although she broke the rules by bringing a weapon to school, the girl in the other incident must have feared an assault. Were there other ways to defend herself? Why didn't she go to school officials and ask for protection? She was charged with aggravated assault.

It would appear the six others had assembled unlawfully with intent to harm the victim. They were charged with "assault by mob." Code of Virginia (18.2-42): Assault or battery by mob. Any and every person composing a mob which shall commit a simple assault or battery shall be guilty of a Class 1 misdemeanor.

Here in Virginia Beach we have been fortunate. There were no reported incidents involving assault by mob or maiming by mob in our schools during the past school year to date. Let's hope our schools will remain safe havens of learning.

Kempsville kids wish city happy 30th birthday

Mayor gives tour of city hall

Students and faculty at Kempsville Meadows Elementary School wanted to wish Virginia Beach a "happy birthday" in a big way.

So, on Sept. 20, the entire student body and staff took the opportunity to individually sign a tremendous birthday banner that read, "Happy Thirtieth Birthday, Virginia Beach From Kempsville Meadows School."

Student hosts and Student Council Association officers, accompanied by Mrs. Christine Goodman, the Reading Resource Teacher, and parent chaperones, visited the mayor of Virginia Beach on Tuesday, Sept. 21, to present her with the birthday banner.

The students attending the celebration arrived at the mayor's office where they were warmly greeted by the mayor's secretary, Louise. She gave the group a tour of the Council's Chambers before introducing them to the mayor.

Kempsville Meadows S.C.A. President Steven Ander made the presentation to the mayor and said a few words in honor of the city's birthday. Upon arrival back at Kempsville Meadows, when asked what impressed him most about City Hall, second grader Ryan Beada said, "Well, when you close the doors (on the Council's Chambers), they sort of disappear!"

The banner will hang in City Hall during the city's birthday celebrations.

His next book, due out in early February, will be entitled, Schools of Hope: Developing the Mind and Character of Today's Youth. He says it will "examine the strengths today's children will need for their future, the contribution that schools can make to developing those potentials (especially how well academic grades and test scores, such as the SAT, predict their children's future success and well being), and then identify some of the parental and home attributes that contribute most to their children's future."

On Friday Oct. 15, Heath will lead discussions with faculty during their in-service day, touching particularly on gender differences.

Pavilion set to host Marcus and Edwards in title-defending bout

North American Boxing Federation (NABF) light heavyweight champion Egerton Marcus will return to The Pavilion at the Virginia Beach Convention Center on Tuesday to defend the title he won there 10 months ago. This time he takes on Willie Edwards of Detroit.

In a co-featured bout, unbeaten junior lightweight Eddie Hopson of St. Louis will take on Jesus Pili of Houston in a 10-rounder.

Also featured Tuesday night will be a special presentation by Boxing Illustrated, honoring Pernell Whitaker as "Best in the World, Pound-for-Pound."

Marcus thrilled fans at The Pavilion last December when he scored an 11th-round TKO over Art Baylis of Philadelphia to capture the vacant title, a feat most say was his greatest as a professional. In a wild give-and-take brawl that had the fans on their feet from the start, Marcus won the title in only his 10th pro bout.

On May 22, Marcus knocked out Andrew Maynard in the eighth-round to retain the title and raise his record to 11-0, with nine wins inside the distance.

The 28-year-old native of Guyana was raised in Toronto, Canada, and currently calls Virginia Beach his home. Fighting as a middleweight, the six-foot Marcus represented Canada in the 1988 Olympics in Seoul, losing a hard-fought decision in the gold medal bout, despite suffering a broken hand in the first round.

Edwards is ranked No. 8 by the NABF at 175-pounds. The 13-year pro is a former NABF champion, winning the belt with a 10th round KO over Dale Grant in August 1982, and successfully defending it seven times before relinquishing the title to fight for a world title in February 1987.

Career victories include knockout wins over former world champions Donny Lalonde (TKO-5/May 1985) and Matthew Saad Muhammad (TKO-11/February 1984). In his only world title bid, Edwards was stopped by Bobby Czyz in the second round of their International Boxing Federation (IBF) light heavyweight title bout.

With a record of 26-4-1, including 20 knockouts, the 38-year-old Edwards is 3-0 with three straight kayos since returning from a five-year retirement in May 1992. In his last fight, Jan. 12 in Michigan, Edwards stopped Victor Potekhin in the first round.

Hopson recently crashed the world rankings and stands at No. 8 by the World Boxing Council and No. 9 by the IBF. He is unbeaten in 20 pro bouts, with 11 knockouts, since turning pro in February 1989, while still in high school. In his last start, on March 23 in San Antonio, Texas, Hopson knocked out Hector Monjarin in the sixth round of their scheduled 10-rounder.

Poll is a former NABF and United States Boxing Association champion with a record of 24-9-3, with four knockouts. Since turning pro in December 1985, Poll has logged victories over former world champions Paul Banke (KO-7/August 1987) and Julian Solis (W-12/October 1988). In his only world title fight, he was stopped by Juan Estrada in April 1989, in a World Boxing Association junior featherweight title bout.

The event is a promotion of Main Events. Tickets, priced at $15 and $25, are available at The Pavilion Box Office, Ticketmaster outlets in Southside (671-8100) and Peninsula (872-8100) and at Wareing's Gym in Virginia Beach (491-0700).

"Kick-off" party for graduation

By BARBARA DUNN
Special to The Virginia Beach Sun

Celebrate Life City-Wide/Virginia Beach, an organization that facilitates cooperation between Virginia Beach high school parents, businesses and schools to have all-night, drug and alcohol-free graduation celebrations, will introduce area businesses and organizations to the concept at a "kick-off" party.

Community newspapers more appealing because of fresh "hometown" news

Class, not mass.
That's who reads The Virginia Beach Sun, The Chesapeake Post and The Portsmouth Times.

Our discriminating readers are intelligent and affluent. They subscribe to our distinguished weeklies as a luxury, not a necessity. Ours is a select, mature readership audience, teeming with settled property owners who have disposable incomes and prefer to shop locally.

But, you may ask, why are community newspapers so popular? What makes them unique compared to the other media.

Simply stated, community newspapers are different. Our attitude is different. Our news coverage is different. Our priorities are different. And we have just as much pride and integrity as any daily newspapers, perhaps more!

Community newspaper readers are special - they know when they've had enough of, and can see through the dreary daily deluge of "bad" and "negative" news which often permeates the other media. With our "hometown" approach to community news coverage, we transcend ordinary news coverage to publish a different and exciting newspaper, and also create an exclusive news and advertising marketplace.

Because of our readers' personal and financial stability and security, they tend to be longtime subscribers to our newspapers and instinctively support those businesses which support the community and its community newspaper. They have no trouble understanding that dollars spent locally in their community will return to them many times over, vis-a-vis, low tax rates, excellent public services and school systems, and modern recreational facilities. But most important, to you and us, local news that's fair, honest and objective.

Advertising

Advertising in community newspapers gives the advertiser all the focused benefits of direct mail, but at a fraction of the cost. With us, your advertisements reach a select segment of an upscale, intelligent, target audience, i.e., local shoppers who financially and socially represent the "best" the community has to offer.

Our community newspapers are also more inclined than other media to be receptive in assisting your client or business obtain precious publicity. Simply send us your personal announcements, new contract and business acquisitions, expansion plans, or just call us with your general story ideas. For example, what are some of your top employees' more interesting hobbies? How have you and your business made it to the top? How does your business fit into the local market?

Juvenile justice system changes urged by panel

Beach task force issues initial report to council

By LEE CAHILL
Exclusive to The Virginia Beach Sun

The chairman of the Virginia Beach Crime Task Force, in an impassioned plea to City Council Tuesday, called for improved facilities, additional personnel and changes in the criminal court system to halt the escalating rate of crime among juveniles at increasingly younger ages.

Charles W. Gardner, chairman of the 11-member Task Force established Nov. 24, 1992 and a former City Councilmember, submitted a list of 10 recommendations relating to juvenile crime, the first problem tackled by the Task Force.

People, he said, have a right to feel safe and be safe. "If we do not begin to get some control, society will lose the next generations. One generation already has been lost."

In detention homes, he said, he

Charles W. Gardner

saw a dismal picture among the lower teens, saying it was heart-breaking to see children with their lives thrown away.

His only fear, he said, is that he would not make the case clear enough for more adequate programs.

A letter from Gardner included with the recommendations states that the Task Force believes "the lack of funding is due primarily to the fact that most people are not aware of the seriousness of the problem, or what the short and long-range consequences will be to this country, not only monetarily, but in wasted lives."

Gardner said that the juvenile offenders need discipline and "many children don't know what discipline is."

It is not only important to provide secure and less secure facilities for the juveniles, but to get into the homes to parents so that they will be responsible, Gardner said.

Although Virginia Beach has a comparatively low crime rate, the numbers are rising as they are in the rest of the country, Gardner said.

Among the recommendations is the construction of a regional detention home in Virginia Beach to provide secure facilities for juveniles when the city's agreement with the Chesapeake Tidewater Detention Home expires in five years. Funds for the facility are allocated in the proposed six-year Capital Improvement Budget with total funding available in 1996-97.

Changes in the court system were also recommended because the juveniles are committing more serious crimes and have learned that they can get away with more because of their age.

Accordingly, the Task Force recommends:

■ Efforts be made to have sentencing guidelines established in the Juvenile Courts similar to those in the Criminal Court system.

■ Lowering the age at which one is treated as an adult by the criminal justice system to 16 years (from 18 years).

■ Changes in the confidential nature of the juvenile courts modified to permit publication of offenses committed, sentences awarded and the presiding judge, while maintaining the privacy of the individual.

The Task Force also recommends:

■ That the schools release the names of truants to the police department.

■ That a school crime line be established and maintained within the middle and high schools of Virginia Beach.

■ That a school resource officer position, with arrest authority, be studied for possible implementation in each of the middle and high schools within the city.

■ That additional staffing be authorized for the Juvenile Court Service Unit of the city.

■ The establishment of a juvenile conference committee program based on the prototype in Chesapeake. The Chesapeake pro-

Dave Weston followed these simple rules and won the hot pepper eating contest at the 24th Street Pavilion Saturday. The contest was put on by the Pepper Lovers Club of Virginia Beach. The 12 entrants ate 10 peppers which ran from mild to hot on their heat scale, with the banana pepper being mild and the habanero as the hottest. Weston won a T-shirt, a $35 restaurant certificate, a plaque, and a free membership to the Pepper Lovers Club. After eating the last of the peppers Weston asked, "May I have a beer now?"

Council, schools close gap on funding woes

By LEE CAHILL

Exclusive to The Virginia Beach Sun

The gap between what the School Board wants in capital projects and what the city can give the schools without increasing taxes isn't as wide as it at one time seemed.

At a joint meeting of the School Board and City Council Tuesday, City Manager James K. Spore said that the city can meet most of the critical needs of the school system and remain within the 5.3-cent real estate tax increase approved by council and effective July 1, 1993.

Initial proposals for the school budget in the five-year Capital Improvement Program (CIP) would have permitted the city to postpone the increase until July 1, 1996 and reduce it to approximately 2.9 cents.

The School Board submitted a budget of $167,634,813 for the years 1993-1999. The city's budget reduced that amount to

Latest rape has police thinking 1 responsible

Jogger attacked Monday along Seashore State Park bike path

The rape of a woman jogger Monday at Seashore State Park has Virginia Beach police believing the crime may be linked to four other rapes which have occurred in the resort city since July.

According to Beach police, a 48-year-old woman was jogging along a popular bike path approximately 6:30 p.m. Monday when the suspect jogged past the woman. A short time later, he confronted the woman from behind, forced her off the path and raped her.

A search by K-9 units, foot patrols and aerial units was conducted to no avail.

The victim was treated and released from an area hospital.

The suspect is described as a black male, 20- to 30-years-old, weighing 180 pounds with close cut or shaved hair. He was last seen wearing white shorts and a blue or black sweatshirt, according to officials. He has a medium complexion and hazel eyes.

Police think the suspect is also responsible for three other rapes plus an attempted rape, and are asking for the public's assistance in finding the individual.

The four other crimes police think are linked to the one Monday:

■ July 21, 11 p.m., in the 300 block of 26th Street;

■ Aug. 6, 11:30 p.m., attempted rape in the 300 block of Norfolk Avenue;

■ Aug. 14, 9:25 p.m., rape in the 900 block of East Piney Branch Drive in Birdneck Village;

■ Sept. 7, between 10 and 11 p.m., rape in the 7100 block of Atlantic Avenue.

The Seashore State Park case, as well as the above cases, are being investigated by Detectives R. Manzione and K.P. Restout of the Investigative Sex Crimes Unit.

Anyone with information regarding any of the rapes or attempted rape, is asked to call the Virginia Beach Crime Solvers at 427-0000. Callers remain anonymous and could be eligible for up to a $1,000 reward with information leading to an arrest.

New trading card features local Hall-of-Famer

Patrolman Frank Edwards was surprised at seeing his image on the new set of trading cards, "Heroes in Blue."

By TERRY SCOTT

Exclusive to The Virginia Beach Sun

On a mild February afternoon in 1991, amid the usual clanging sounds of train cars coupling and uncoupling, whistles blowing, and boat horns blasting, Patrolman Frank Edwards of the Virginia Port Authority had just lit a cigarette.

"The collision I heard behind me at first didn't come as a surprise, since I was so accustomed to working around loud noises, but this particular sound had a little more 'boom' to it," Edwards said, remembering the day.

Turning around, what Edwards saw about 300 yards away was the young driver of a tractor-trailer who had apparently lost control of his vehicle near the entrance of the Newport News Marine Terminal. Failing to negotiate a curve, the driver braked hard, though the weight of the fully loaded-trailer continued to push the truck forward.

"The truck rolled up a concrete 'Jersey' barrier and flipped over the top of the overpass, before plunging 60 feet upside down and crashing on the railroad tracks below," Edwards recalled. "At the moment of impact the 40 foot trailer burst apart, leaving nothing but its shell, scattering debris over the entire area."

In seconds, Edwards had rushed to the smoldering vehicle and, through the dense smoke, saw the disoriented driver on his hands and knees attempting to escape the burning truck cab. Ignoring the danger, Edwards freed the driver, then, with the help of an unidentified pedestrian, the two men carried the driver away from the truck.

"As soon as we placed the injured man down behind a concrete abutment, the fuel tanks exploded and the tractor was engulfed in flames," Edwards said.

The Newport News Fire and Rescue Squad responded quickly, and within 30 minutes had put out the fire and contained the fuel oil that spilled. Miraculously, the driver of the truck was treated and released from the hospital after several days.

For his bravery, Edwards was given a Silver Medallion, The Chairman's Award, by the Virginia Port Authority. Then in March 1991, upon the recommendation of the Awards Committee, the National Board of Trustees at the American Police Hall of Fame issued Edwards the Silver Star for bravery.

To his credit, Edwards insists that he did nothing different than any other officer would have done, given the same circumstances. His humility is refreshing, but that argument is not always true. Occasionally, there is a sense of courage, or, unselfishness, within some people that sets them apart from most others.

Before signing on with the Port Authority in 1979, Edwards had spent 22 years in the Navy, retiring as a Chief Petty Officer. During his first 13 years in the service he was Senior Chief Torpedoman on the Theodore Roosevelt, before transferring to submarine tender duty for the remainder of his career. His last assignment was as Chief Master-At-Arms aboard the USS LYS Spear AS-36.

Along with his induction into the American Police Hall of Fame Museum, located in Miami, Edwards has also been chosen to represent the museum with his appearance in their new set of trading cards, titled "Heroes in Blue." These cards are being distributed nationwide in local retail stores in hopes that they will become card collectors best choices.

Common among the officers selected was the fact that each had won the Silver Star for bravery at a great risk to their career. Sponsored by the National Association of Chiefs of Police, and The American Federation of Police, this idea was developed last year in response to a firm that began manufacturing cards featuring criminals such as Al Capone, Charles Manson, Baby Face Nelson, and mass murderer John Wayne Gacy. Hardly the type of individual a parent would want their child to emulate.

Commentary

Where's the money?

Every city in Tidewater is facing the same monumental task, one which by federal law is supposed to be completed by 1995. The Americans with Disabilities Act requires that all public areas be completely accessible to and for persons with disabilities.

Citizens who are handicapped with some type of disability welcomed the federal government's mandate, as did most other Americans. It is only right that all citizens have equal access and a physical liability should not preclude anyone from enjoying life's simplest pleasures, such as entering a building.

But the mandate itself has caused major financial problems for most localities. Virginia Beach, for example, estimates it will cost the resort city almost $23 million to fully comply with the law; in Portsmouth the estimate is $25 million; Hampton, $1.3 million; Newport News, $2.2 million. Chesapeake and Norfolk have yet to determine the costs in those cities, but the price tag is certainly in the millions.

Are the numbers inflated, as some critics claim? It's possible. But even if they are bloated by twice as much, local governments are still staring square in the face of massive financial outlays to reach compliance.

Could the governments have been more foresighted and begun placing funds for the projects aside over the past years? Probably.

But the problem comes, not from local governments ignoring the problem or burying their heads in the sand. No, the problem comes from the federal government and is compounded by the same problems caused by state government — unfunded mandates.

What are they? Simply put, it means the state and federal governments have enacted laws, rules and regulations which must be followed by local governments, yet provided no financial assistance to meet the requirements. Every year, more and more financial responsibility is placed on the shoulders of the local governments, the ones formerly funded, if not totally, at least partially by state or federal funds.

Residents who demand that their local governments conform to ADA and other unfunded mandates should direct their anger in two directions — toward the local government for being lax in foresight, but mostly toward the state and federal government for placing such an unfair burden on the localities.

Disabled residents have every right to expect localities to comply with the law, but they should also expect those who ordered the changes to pay their fair share. — J.W.B.

Impressing others with trivia not an easy task which are the lifeblood of a newspaper. Part of our function is to inform readers with facts and data which will impact on their lives somehow.

Today, I stray from the usual ramblings and bring some honest-to-God facts. You must decide if they will impact on your life and, if so, how.

Famous frontiersman Daniel Boone preferred forests and fields to hearth and home. He also preferred broad-brimmed beaver hats to con-skin caps, which he never wore, though he was portrayed in them many times.

According to history, Boone died Sept. 26, 1820, at the age of 85 — not in the wild — but indoors from indigestion following eating too many sweet potatoes.

Henry H. Bliss has the distinction of becoming America's first automobile fatality. Bliss, a real estate broker, was struck by a car driven by Arthur Smith as he stepped off a streetcar into traffic in New York City (where else?) on Sept. 13, 1899. Smith was jailed and eventually fined $1,000.

It was a humble wisp that first gave the world paper.

For centuries primitive man had carved hieroglyphics on stone, while following generations "wrote" on mud tablets, clay tablets, wax, and animal skin. Then along came the paper wisp, which chewed vegetable fiber to pulp to form its nest.

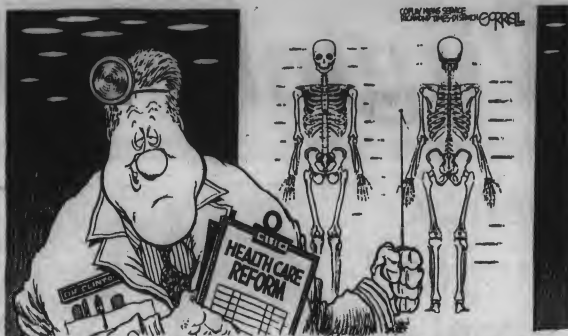

T'ai' Lin, a Chinese minister, studied the habits of the wisp and in 105 A.D. successfully produced the first paper from bark and old linen. Unfortunately, the Chinese kept their secret for hundreds of years, and it was not until the 12th century that the news reached Europe. (Probably on paper.)

- The American silver dollar is the size, weight and metal of the Spanish "Piece of Eight" so sought by the buccaners of the 17th century. This coin was widely circulated in the Americas. Often it was cut into "bits" to make change. A 1/8 section was the smallest and was known as a "one bit." It had a value of 12-1/2 cents. So the 25-cent piece became "two bits."

Now, don't you feel more enlightened and informed than you did five minutes ago? Sure you do. These are important things to know; which should make you sleep much easier tonight knowing you have bettered yourself.

Of course, finding a casual way to slip such chunks of information into a casual conversation to astound and astonish your friends will not be easy. Perhaps you can suggest a game of Trivial Pursuit. It's no fun knowing good stuff like this if you can't show off.

Reader supports candidate's plan for regional recovery

Editor, George Allen, the Republican candidate for governor, has proposed creating Regional Economic Coordinating Councils to help get the economy in Virginia (and Virginia Beach) moving again.

Who would be asked to serve on these councils? Local business, education, and community leaders and local elected officials.

These are the people who get the job done. It would be a far cry from the record of the past 12 years, when governors with Congressman Allen's opponent, Mary

Sue Terry, at their right hand, looked to the ranks of party hacks when something had to be done. People who they owed a favor to, not people who were qualified.

Congratulations to Mr. Allen for recognizing that government belongs to the people and should work for those people.

Beach resident believes Allen leadership would be pro-active

Editor, A simple review of the members of the current administration in Richmond and the Democratic Party in Virginia makes me feel that they would like Virginia to be a "state of denial." They deny the need to incarcerate for full terms the repeat violent offenders; they deny the hemorrhaging state and local budgets; they deny the exploding costs of ineffective education.

It's time for the truth, a clean slate, and for our commonwealth to move forward. Listening to George Allen, I see no denial of our need to take pro-active steps to get Virginia back on track. It's hopeful and refreshing. Thank God, we are finally being treated like responsible adults by the Republican candidate, who is willing to roll up his sleeves and get to work!

Voters can write in candidates during elections

Editor, Citizens are not aware that during a general election and a presidential election, the write-in ballot can be used. No doubt, the general registrar's office will see to it that write-in ballots will be available and election officials are properly trained to answer questions.

I feel also that the registrar should provide information to Portsmouth citizens concerning the procedure involved with a write-in should a person desire to exercise that election right.

Therefore, I call upon that office to publish information in the local media and to provide information concerning the steps required to write-in a candidate during the upcoming general election on Nov. 2.

Colleges squawk; Wilder scoffs

Virginia's largest newspapers recently published lengthy articles purporting to show that cost-cutting in the state system of higher education has been more apparent than real.

Commonwealth Commentary

By Ray Garland, columnist

This is hardly a new story. Almost a year ago, the State Council of Higher Education warned that a crisis was coming unless colleges changed their ways.

Among its recommendations were keeping students out who aren't prepared to do college-level work; dropping those who dawdle; extending the academic year; and requiring faculty to teach more.

For its pains, the council, which functions mainly as an advisory agency, was berated by college presidents and Wilder's secretary of education and backed off.

To hear the public colleges tell it, state budget cuts have been devastating. But the newspapers show they actually have more money to spend. This has come, of course, from charging students much higher prices and more generous private donations.

For some strange reason, many people believe that education, like health care, should be free to them, or largely so. And not many years ago, tuition at state colleges was absurdly cheap. Even today, it does not seem unreasonable.

At the beginning of 1992, full-time students at community colleges paid only $1,050 a year in tuition and required fees. At the state's senior colleges, it ranged from a low of $2,300 at Clinch Valley College to $4,325 at Virginia Military Institute — room and board extra.

Out-of-state students paid almost three times as much for tuition, or something close to the actual cost.

If they paid full boat, in-state students still paid considerably less than half the cost of instruction, making no allowance for the state's large investment in physical plant.

For 1992, the state subsidy per full-time student ranged from a low of $2,477 at community colleges to $7,759 at William & Mary.

For all institutions, the average taxpayer stipend was $3,778. In fairness, this was near the bottom among the 50 states.

There are several observations to be drawn from this. For some time, the cost of higher education has risen faster than inflation. Clearly, that can't be allowed to continue indefinitely.

But certain outlays still seem reasonable. Looking at the community college system, with 33 campuses and 72,000 full-time equivalent students, we find total costs below average, per-student expenditures in the public schools.

The rapid increase in college costs has spawned a vast industry of loans and grants, some of it tainted by fraud.

Many students complain of graduating with poor prospects of decent employment, suggesting under a mountain of debt.

We might measure this in a recent report from the Student Loan Marketing Association, better known as Sallie Mae, a federally chartered enterprise packaging student loans guaranteed by the government for resale in the open market.

This doesn't tell the whole story by any means, but Sallie Mae had $2 billion on the books in 1978 compared to $15 billion now. It projects $23 billion in loans by 1998.

But colleges seem intent upon preserving the old ways of short days and long vacations that have made their communities richer and more pleasant places.

In the case of 20 Northeastern schools charged by the Justice Department with price-fixing, it was revealed that for many years they had met each April to compare notes and make such adjustments as needed to make sure that net tuition price would be the same, regardless of which school a student attended.

It is passing strange that the two sectors of the U.S. economy dominated by government control and funding — health and higher education — advertise least on the basis of price.

It would be refreshing to see just one college cut through the numbo-jumbo and proclaim "We do it better for less!"

Doing so, of course, would jeopardize accreditation. When challenged, the brethren can be ferocious.

Understandably, the schools haven't taken this criticism lying down. One professor at Virginia Tech wrote The Roanoke Times detailing his work schedule, which he expressed as encompassing at least 70 hours a week, almost year-round.

The Virginian-Pilot told a different story, at least as it relates to class hours, admittedly the

Time for Kelso and Aspen to hit the road

Well, a decision has finally been reached as to the status of Admiral Frank B. Kelso II, Chief of Naval Operations. In spite of the fact that Navy Secretary John H. Dalton has recommended that Kelso be asked to resign for allowing the events to occur at the 1991 Tailhook Convention at Las Vegas, Kelso says he will not resign unless asked to do so by Defense Secretary Les Aspin.

Aspin has decided to keep him on. The decision by Aspin is just another example of the sorry leadership this country is having to endure. By calling for Kelso's resignation, Navy Secretary Dalton, who has the responsibility for running the Navy, is telling the world that he has no confidence in Kelso, yet Aspin, who at times seems to be lost in the job of Defense Secretary decides to keep him on.

The Navy started losing its credibility with the USS Iowa when it lied about what caused the explosion and has been on the downgrade ever since. Then along comes Tailhook and U.S. Representative Pat Schroeder and a few more men-at-arms in Congress, who proceed to take the Navy apart, and Kelso who, attended the convention where he made a speech, was in no position to defend the Navy from the vicious attacks by Schroeder and others of her ilk who seemed to be hell bent on the destruction of the United States Navy.

Unfortunately during the Tailhook investigation the base closure hearings started and Tidewater was scheduled to take some big hits, especially the Naval Aviation Depot. Kelso approved the closure and seemed to be insensitive to all of the closures in general. Perhaps he could not have done anything but the perception by many government workers in the local areas is that he did nothing to help.

He had no credibility. Had it not been for Norman Sisisky, Owen Pickett and John Warner, the situation could have been much worse. Chuck Robb sat on his hands and the voters should remember that at election time. With all due respect to Admiral Kelso, who may have had a distinguished career, he can no longer be an effective leader with the present cloud hanging over his head.

Les Aspin should know that and it makes one wonder why he would keep him on. I'm beginning to believe that Aspin's leadership is no better than Kelso's. Perhaps the country would be better served if Clinton got rid of both of them.

Welcome to the real world.

ability to move along. You lose track of time and place as you soak in the scenery and the atmosphere, almost unaware of where you are. Suddenly, you are awakened by the blast of a car horn. Breaking out of your reverie, you find that you and your bicycle have drifted into the middle of the roadway's travel lane and there are six cars stacked up behind you.

Embarrassed, you pull back to the right edge of the road where you are supposed to be and quietly proceed as passing drivers stare at you and some scream unprintable streams of words at you.

Such is one of many in the everyday experiences of automobile driving and bicycle riding in the rural areas of our city.

Without a doubt, conflicts between those who feel roads are only for cars and those who feel that roads are for everyone exist all across our nation. Here, in Virginia Beach, however, the conflict is nowhere more obvious than in the southern part of our city. Bicyclists are drawn there for a variety of reasons — some for the spectacular beauty and scenery, some for the flat topography and uninterrupted long distance riding that the area can provide, and some because a bicycle is their only means of transportation.

The fact is that the roadways of our city are routes of transportation circulation. But transportation means more than just automobiles — it also means bicycles. By state law, bicycles and automobiles have an equal right to the use of the roadway.

Bicycles, however, must follow some special rules established by the Commonwealth. As is obvious to anyone driving behind a bicyclist who does not obey the law, bicycles can be obstacles to the efficient functioning of our roadways if they are improperly ridden.

The bicyclist must ride as far to the right of the roadway's travel lane as possible. Bicycle riders in a group must ride in single file unless they are passing another bicyclist.

By the way, "packs" of bicyclists using an entire travel lane do not qualify for the "passing another bicyclist" part of the rules.

How do we as a city help to resolve some of these problems? During the latter part of May 1993, and the early part of June 1993, 21 roadside "Share the Road" bicycle signs were installed on several rural roads in the southern end of the city. The signs were installed in an attempt to alert motorists and bicyclists that they should share the roadways.

The signs evolved from a request by members of the City Council's appointed Greenways, Trails and Bikeways Committee, a group responsible for advising the Planning Department during the development of the city's Greenways, Trails and Bikeways Plan.

The committee consists of bicyclists, horse riders, canoeists, hikers and interested citizens. The committee asked the staff of the Traffic Engineering Division of the Public Works Department and the Planning Department staff to study the conflicts between automobiles and bicyclists in the southern part of our city and to recommend what the best methods would be to make motorists and bicyclists more aware of each other and their responsibilities on the rural roads.

I should emphasize, however, that this is a problem not only in the southern part of our city, but one throughout the city. The southern part of the city was addressed first because the problem seemed to be greatest there.

After a detailed review of the issues, it was determined by staff that one viable solution with immediate impact and lowest cost would be the installation of "Share the Road" signs at key road intersections.

The goal would be to minimize conflict between the motorists and bicyclists in an effort to promote a greater awareness that the roads are to be shared.

Based on a survey of bicycle use on rural roads in the southern end of the city, the Public Works Traffic Engineering and Planning Department staff and the Greenways, Trails and Bikeways Committee suggested that the following rural roads be included for the installation of signs: North Landing Road, West Neck Road, Pleasant Ridge Road, Muddy Creek Road, Nantuxy Creek Road, Morris Neck Road, Pungo Ferry Road and Blackwater Road.

Together, these roads can be used as a continuous circular loop through the southern portion of the city of Virginia Beach.

The installation of the signs is but a beginning step in what will hopefully be an ongoing effort throughout the city to educate our citizens that vehicular and bicycle traffic can co-exist when laws are obeyed and common courtesy is adhered to.

The Greenways, Trails and Bikeways Plan, projected for completion by the end of the year, will provide recommendations for the planning and design of the complete bikeway and trail system citywide and will be part of a larger effort to develop an Outdoors Plan, which will provide the city with comprehensive recreation and open space planning and policy guidance.

The recommendations of the Greenways, Trails and Bikeways Plan will also provide suggestions for safety, ease of maintenance of bikeways and trails and user-friendly routes that would like many of the city's activity areas. Information on the Trails Plan and the Outdoors Plan can be obtained from the city's Planning Department at 427-4621.

It is my hope that each of you get a chance to enjoy the marvelous scenery and natural resources that the city of Virginia Beach offers, whether on foot, on a bicycle, a horse, a canoe or in a car.

Enjoy it, tell others about it and remember to always respect the rights of others around you who are also trying to lose themselves in the beauty that is Virginia Beach.

Mayor inks proclamation

Helping Virginia Beach Mayor Meyera E. Oberndorf take a "bite out of crime," McGruff the Crime Dog was on hand for the reading of the Crime Prevention Month proclamation. Members of the Crime Prevention Steering Committee, Cape Henry and Princess Anne women's clubs and the Virginia Beach Police Department also participated.

Cable courtroom OK, real thing is better

Inserted in Cox Cable's bill this month was a flyer introducing Court TV as an idea as old as America. It asserts that this new 24-hour cable channel will take viewers to courtrooms across the country where they can watch the most important issues of the day.

This advertisement claims further that "the real life drama of justice, live, as it happens, is as riveting and as important today as when our rule of law was first written."

Indeed, anyone in America may observe trials live and in progress. With few exceptions, the courts in our judicial system are open to the public. In Virginia Beach there is even a special "Day in Court" program, developed in 1987, for public school students in government and business law classes to observe the judicial system at work.

This Virginia Beach Court Docent Program provides an opportunity for young people to observe trials in district and circuit court three days a week during the school year. The docents are volunteer teaching guides. Most are women who are wives of attorneys or former teachers, but this year there is a male docent assisting with this law-related education program.

There are other changes as the program begins a new season in the new judicial center. Students will arrive at 8:30 a.m. on a school bus, but will then have to go through security. They will then go to Courtroom Seven for a short mock trial in which they portray the roles of officers of the court.

The bailiff, Kevin Leroy, assists the docents as they give an overview of the judicial system. He discusses the various duties connected with his office. The students are always interested in seeing a stun gun as he explains how he carries out his function of maintaining security and order in the courtroom.

After this orientation period, the students observe traffic court, which is a part of the lower district court. Most of these young people now have a driver's license, so they relate to those who have been charged with speeding, running a red light, or causing an accident.

Observing the circuit court in action is the best stop. One change that creates a small problem is that the courtrooms are not as large as those in the old court complex. Since the tours are usually composed of 35 students plus a teacher and two docents, the smaller courtrooms in the new complex may require the class to be divided into two sections. Some students may be disappointed the class if it is clear of prisoners. Otherwise, the students will walk around to the entrance on the far side of the correctional facility, where they are met by a deputy sheriff who conducts that last part of the tour.

The current Director of Virginia Beach Court Docent Program is Leslie Duvall (Mrs. Randolph). She will be glad to provide more information and arrange training for anyone interested in volunteering to be a court docent. Her telephone number is 428-2429.

Realtors aiming to help battered women

By GAIL S. PHILLIPS
Special to The Virginia Beach Sun

The Help and Emergency Response (H.E.R.) Shelter in Portsmouth is a place where abused women and children can find help to stop the cycle of Domestic Violence. In at least half of the families where women are abused, the children are abused also.

Battering is a crime and a learned behavior that can be unlearned with the help of H.E.R.'s community education is crucial to fulfilling the mission of eliminating domestic violence.

HER provides shelter and engages in the dedicated effort to eliminate domestic violence. To assist HER in meeting their future expansion goal, the community service committee of the Portsmouth/Chesapeake Association of Realtors is conducting an auction of valuable goods and services to raise funds for the shelter.

According to Chairman Priscilla

Lemoine, "The auction will be held on the evening of Oct. 29 at the Women's Club in Portsmouth. The evening will include a silent auction from 6 to 7 p.m. and a lively auction from 7:30 to 10 p.m."

The cost of tickets is $10. All proceeds from the auction will be donated to the benefit of HER to assist with the purchase of the property and the building of their new shelter.

According to HER Executive Director, Sue Sigler, "No one deserves to be beaten and the Portsmouth/Chesapeake Association of Realtors is showing their dedication to eliminating domestic violence through this marvelous fundraiser for our shelter. The directors and staff of HER are delighted to have this organization help us meet the need for a larger facility that will house more women and children."

The Portsmouth/Chesapeake Association of Realtors needs help to raise money for this community service program. HER services abused women and children in the cities of Virginia Beach, Chesapeake, Portsmouth and Suffolk.

The shelter requires assistance to meet its monetary needs to help women begin to learn about esteem, self-worth, shown skills of parenting and given information to help them become more self-sufficient and self-supporting.

Through this support the children also have a chance to go to school, attend programs and field trips, get help with homework or simply have a chance to play outside without a cloud of violence.

Contact the Portsmouth/Chesapeake Association of Realtors for ticket information at 397-4613 or come by the business office located at 913 Halifax Ave. in Portsmouth.

Beach resident writes her way through grief

By TERRY SCOTT
Exclusive to The Virginia Beach Sun

Which is harder, the death, or divorce of a spouse? According to Sally Robinson, author of Seasons of a Marriage, there is no doubt. "A divorce is definitely harder," Robinson answered. "A divorce is bitter, causing a loss of self-image. Those strains can remain with you throughout your life. Divorce is never final."

After divorcing her first husband of seven years, in 1962 she married Dr. C. Roland Robinson, a naval aviator who flew 52 missions during the Korean War, and himself recently divorced. Robinson had been a prominent, well-respected dentist for 33 years when he died in October 1991.

"Death is more hurtful, but you're able to close the door," the Virginia Beach resident said. "Grieving, as painful as it is, is a necessary process to becoming a whole person again. It's a form of healing."

Guilt, rejection, heartache, and pain. In her book Seasons of a Marriage, the 60-year-old former opera singer speaks on the effects of divorce, and on the death of a spouse.

"Death creates a void previously occupied by someone dearly loved," Robinson writes, having found it nearly impossible to overcome the loss of her second husband. "But in death, a widow or widower is left with self-respect. People are supportive during this period, and that support is necessary during the lonely time. Death forces acceptance, and doesn't leave the scars of divorce."

Following the death of her husband, Robinson travelled, staying with family and friends for solace. During that time it was suggested that she record her experiences by writing, her friends telling her it would serve as a therapeutic exercise for her grieving.

Six months after her husband died, Sally Robinson started her journal. She found that writing about her history became a helpful tool, and seemed to give her life a sense of purpose.

"Four months later, in the parking lot outside of First Presbyterian Church in Virginia Beach, I set my journal on the roof of my car to unlock the car door," Robinson remembered. "Getting inside, I started the car and drove off. Three days later a message was left on my answering machine that a woman had found my book."

When Robinson returned the woman's phone call, she learned that the young woman had read the journal, and, not having found the author's name or address in it, she traced Sally through her deceased husband's former practice. The young woman contacted a receptionist who used to work for Dr. Robinson, but now assists another dentist who acquired Dr. Robinson's practice at Seaside Towers, in Virginia Beach.

The young woman described herself as having a Master's Degree in creative writing, and felt that Robinson's book had information about blended families that could be very informative for today's society. (Dr. Robinson had three children, and Sally had an adopted daughter at the time of their marriage). The woman went on to say that Sally should make every effort to get her journal published.

A music major at Meredith College in Raleigh, N.C., Robinson never had any formal training as a writer, but a year and a half later her manuscript was accepted by Cornerstone Publishing, in Virginia Beach. Seasons of a Marriage addresses the relationships between children from previous marriages, and the challenge of raising blended families -- step-children, adopted children, and natural children. It offers real life accounts of a love that endured all hardships, and of managing life after the death of a spouse.

"Divorce and step-parenting are ways of life," Robinson writes. "My message is for the hurting ones in these circumstances."

Farms open up patches for area school children, general public

By SASHA TOMEY

Exclusive to The Virginia Beach Sun

Miss Alicia's class from Lotus Pond Learning Center in Lago Mar had never seen anything like it. They jumped from the van, their eyes opened wide with surprise and ran to embrace pumpkins that were bigger than themselves.

"Wow!" they screamed as they raced into the pumpkin patch. Alicia Carr, their teacher, laughed as she watched them. After a few moments of pumpkin hugging, Carr and her two volunteers helped the 10 students climb aboard the wagon packed with straw for a real hayride.

"We're going to pick out some pumpkins for you to take home," Carr explained. The children, quiet with excitement, gripped the sides of the wagon as the tractor began pulling the trailer down the dusty road toward the pumpkin patch.

Although the hot temperatures and lack of rain were not kind to soybean and corn crops this year, Jeff Henley of Henley's farm does not seem to mind. The pumpkin patch is overflowing with rounder, bigger, better pumpkins than Henley has seen in years.

"Pumpkins hate water," Henley explained. "If it rains a lot and they sit in the water, they rot. That's why some years you don't have many pumpkins, or what you do get are lighter in color and just not real nice to look at."

G.W. Henley Farm is just one of several farms in Pungo that offer a pumpkin patch. They also offer hayrides as well as pick your own fields of butterbeans and broccoli during the month of October.

The ride is a pretty one and takes about seven minutes to the back field. Along the way are fields of Christmas trees, peppers and butterbeans. Near the pumpkin patch the Henleys are already planting strawberries that will be ripe in time for next year's Strawberry Festival.

Each day the Henley's welcome children to the farm, helping them into the trailers and showing them how to pick out that perfect pumpkin. There are times when several groups of children arrive at the same time. Although it requires extra work for Henley and his crew, they do not mind. For some inner city kids, this is the first time they have ever been to a farm.

"Are we going to the circus?" Miss Alicia asked as the tractor neared the pumpkin field.

"No!" screamed the 2-year-olds.

"Are we going home?" Miss Alicia asked.

"No!" they chorused again.

"Well, where are we going?" she asked.

"Pumpkin patch!" they yelled back.

They charged through the pumpkin patch turning pumpkins and looking for a perfect trophy to take home. Miss Alicia wrote their names on their pumpkins and helped them back into the wagon.

"I think this is good for kids," Henley said as the children carrying their precious pumpkins climb into the van that will take them back to their school.

Anna Blackwelder from Knotts Island found a really big pumpkin in Pungo.

"Kids?" a woman who has come to the register to pay for the butterbeans she has picked laughs. "It's good for me!"

G.W. Henley Farm is open to the public Monday through Saturday from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m., and 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Sundays. For more information call 426-7501.

Drug-free fun day slated at Trashmore

The Virginia Beach City Public Schools and the Virginia Beach Police Department invite the community to a Drug-Free Day on Saturday, Oct. 23 at Mount Trashmore, from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

This event is the kickoff for Red Ribbon Week which is a national campaign targeted to encourage people to lead a drug-free life. There will be games, entertainment, local celebrities, food and much more. Everyone is welcome to spend the day, enjoying drug free activities for all ages.

Boy Scouts begin annual popcorn sales

Local Boy Scout Troops, Cub Scout Packs, and explorer posts will kick off their annual popcorn sale which provides needed financial resources for program supplies and materials. This week, 150 units involving 5,000 youth will hit the streets selling popcorn, caramel corn and microwave popcorn in an effort to pay their own way.

Last year, the sale raised approximately $120,000. The money was used for equipment, transportation and camp fees. The popcorn sales provides an excellent way for young people to practice sales techniques while learning self-reliance.

Norfolk residents, Lee and Kathy Duckworth shop with their pet at Petstuff on Virginia Beach Boulevard at the Janaf Shopping Center recently. This is the first time that Axel, a 4-year-old black lab, has been in a store.

Finally, there's a store where the pets are OK

By CARLA ISAACSON
Exclusive to The Virginia Beach Sun

If you've ever wanted to go shopping with your pet, Petstuff on Virginia Beach Boulevard in the Janaf Shopping Center in Norfolk is the place to go.

Whether you're browsing for bowser or looking for another pet, bring your animals along, they are welcome at Petstuff.

The sign on the door of the newly opened pet store reads, "Don't forget your pet!" This new concept in shopping is going on up and down the East Coast, from Florida to New York, according to John Patton, store manager.

The chain of stores sells pet supplies and pets. In the fish department pet specialist Alan Cudworth maintains the wall of aquariums and the hamsters and reptiles.

The aviary department is maintained by pet specialist Alicia Stanton. The birds have been quarantined for a week, as is the store's policy for the health of the animal, but are now ready to be adopted to a good home.

The policy at Petstuff is to place the animals in a loving environment where they will have a good home. According to Patton,

"We want to match up a pet with the customer, to make sure that the customer will care for the animal. We are concerned about our animals."

Since Petstuff is a company that is concerned about the environment, according to Patton, they do not sell saltwater fish because taking the fish out of the ocean can do damage to the coral reefs. "So all we sell is freshwater fish."

They also do not sell poisonous reptiles, snakes, or iguanas for obvious reasons. They would not want to be responsible for someone getting hurt from a deadly bite.

Another policy at the store according to Patton is that they do not sell cats or dogs since there are so many that are already homeless.

So, one Saturday a month the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals is allowed a corner of the store to bring in their animals to try to find them homes. Around Oct. 16 the SPCA will be at the store for the first time to adopt out some of their cats and dogs.

Patton said the store works closely with the SPCA. "We try to support the SPCA as much as possible. We donate all types of pet food to them. Anything the vendor gives us credit for we donate it to the SPCA."

Amphitheatre sites are narrowed to five as Navy objections raises to three

By LEE CAHILL
Exclusive to The Virginia Beach Sun

The five organizations that have expressed an interest in an outdoor amphitheatre in Virginia Beach will be asked to help in the selection of a site. Five sites have been identified but possibly more will be in consideration.

At a work session Tuesday, Mark Wanner, of the city's Department of Economic Development, presented the pros and cons of five sites — three city-owned and two privately owned — based on the criteria of nearby housing, Air Installation Compatible Use Zone (AICUZ), accessibility, utilities, parking, environment and cost.

All of the identified sites are in the Princess Anne Courthouse-General Booth Boulevard area. Councilmember John D. Moss suggested, however, that other sites should be considered, in an area where roads and infrastructure already are adequate to deliver 5,300 to 6,000 vehicles to and from the concerts.

At the same time he suggested removing from consideration immediately the three sites which are in the AICUZ noise zones two and three. If the Navy objects to the sites, and it does, said Moss, remove the sites and add sites where the roads are. He mentioned two sites in the Kempsville Borough.

Wanner said that the Site Evaluation Committee considered only those properties were property owners responded to a city-placed ad.

He said that other sites could be considered but that the committee wants the five organizations that have indicated an interest in developing an amphitheatre here as well as the Resort Area Advisory Commission and the Parks and Recreation Commission to participate in further evaluations.

In a letter to Mayor Meyera Oberndorf, Capt. J.W. Crane, Jr., USN, said that since AICUZ guidelines list outdoor music shells and amphitheatres as incompatible uses in noise zone two, the Navy would oppose construction of an outdoor amphitheatre at any of the sites except for those that lie in zone one.

Of the five sites evaluated for the 16,000 to 18,000-seat outdoor amphitheatre, which could cost up to $11,050,000, the Buffington property seems to be in the lead.

The property is adjacent to and southeast of the Virginia Beach Municipal Center on a 600-acre tract of city-owned property.

It is in noise zone one, the lowest noise zone designation of the Oceana Naval Air Station, and could share 3,000 parking spaces with the Municipal Center which would save approximately $2 million or bring the total cost $1.5 million below the base cost. Two lanes of Ferrell Parkway which would have to be constructed would cost $750,000.

Joint use of the site, a forested area featuring West Neck Creek could include nature trails, canoe boat access and natural area concepts.

The other sites studied are: □ Princess Anne Commons, northwest and adjacent to the Municipal Center also in the lowest noise zone with a savings in parking costs by sharing Municipal Center parking, but the construction of two lanes of Ferrell Parkway ($750,000) and the acquisition of 36 acres ($1.6 million) would bring the cost $350,000 over the basic project cost.

□ Corporate Landing, on General Booth Boulevard, the site of the Virginia Beach Development's Authority's master-planned mixed-use business park adjacent to the alignment of the Southeastern Expressway, is in noise zone two and would cost $4.8 million over the basic project cost because of the need for a perimeter parking ($1.8 million) and the payment of a $3-million Debt of Trust on the property.

□ Owl's Creek, a 37-acre parcel that will be acquired by the city from the state as part of the Pendleton land purchase, is bounded by General Booth Boulevard on the east, Birdneck Road on the south and the Ocean Breeze Festival Park on the north. The land is in noise zone two and would require the relocation of the tennis center ($1.2 million), not including land acquisition, bringing the net cost for the site to $1.2 million over the basic project cost.

□ Ocean Breeze Festival Park is offered by the park's owner for development of the amphitheatre as part of the amusement park. It is bounded by Birdneck Road on the west and General Booth Boulevard on the east and is in noise zone three. There appear to be no additional costs over the project cost.

Councilmember James W. Brazier Jr., in reply to Moss's comments, said that the amphitheatre promoters should determine whether they want to risk the noise. Also, he said, land in Kempsville will have considerable price tags.

An amphitheatre site acoustical survey made by Wrightson, Johnson, Haddon and Williams, Inc. finds that the Buffington site and the Corporate Landing site are the best from an environmental noise standpoint.

The five organizations interested in the amphitheatre are Avalon Entertainment Group, Blockbuster Amphitheatre Entertainment Company, Cellular Dore Productions of Virginia, Inc., Nederlander Productions Company of America, Inc. and PACE Entertainment Corporation/Sony Music.

Cape Henry dedicates new Perry Library

By CARLA ISAACSON
Exclusive to The Virginia Beach Sun

The joke around the Cape Henry Collegiate School has been, "Do you want to check out a book?" This is said with a hand held directly in front of your face to indicate tight quarters.

They're not joking anymore about the tiny library at the independent school on Mill Dam Road in Virginia Beach. About 1,000 people were in attendance recently to dedicate the opening of the new Perry Library.

An 18,000-square foot state-of-the-art library/media center has replaced the old 2,000 square foot library which is now used for three kindergarten classes.

Plans for the new addition to Cape Henry began in 1987 and construction for the building began in January. Along with the library, the new building has administrative offices, eight classrooms, and a bookstore.

Andrew Fine, First Citizen of Virginia Beach, founder and longtime supporter of Cape Henry addressed the faculty, student body, Board of Trustees, founders, and friends at the official opening recently.

"It's a fulfillment of the dreams and aspirations of a lot of people," Fine said. "The library has all the classic elements and state-of-the-art features, and it is a splendid combination of the two."

Cape Henry was originally founded as the Everett School in 1924. They moved to the present site in 1969 and changed the name. Original founder Dickie Jones, who took over the school with her husband and aunt until they relocated in 1959 said, "This blows my mind! In my wildest dreams I never imagined that something like this would come from that little bit of school that we had so many years ago."

The 31-acre campus is a fully accredited, independent college preparatory school with grades in pre-kindergarten through twelve.

Additionally, the City Council will consider adoption of Sections 450, 451, 452, 453, 454 and 455 of the City Zoning Ordinance. The proposed amendments pertain to rural planning policies and related regulations and affect certain sections of the existing Agricultural Districts, create a new Rural Residential District and add a provision to the Subdivision Regulations regarding rural cul-de-sacs. HOPE AND HELP FOUND

Ellen is a single mother with two young children. For years she endured physical and emotional abuse at the hands of her husband, until she finally broke free and sought protection for herself and her children at the HER Shelter, a United Way agency

Ellen was unemployed, and unable to look for a job because she could not afford child care. Another United Way Agency, The Bertha Snyder Children's Care Fund was able to help. They provided funds to pay for a babysitter. Now Ellen has a job and is rebuilding her life. Rather than fall further into the "system," Ellen is able to provide for her children and fulfill her own dreams as well.

More than one in five people in South Hampton Roads is helped by a United Way Agency each year. When you give to United Way you are helping your friends, neighbors, family and maybe even yourself. For many, it's the only way.

United Way

FOR MANY, IT'S THE ONLY WAY.

gram. Established in 1985, is one of only five in the country and the only one in Virginia.

The establishment of a parenting course program for young mothers, single mothers and mothers on ADC (Aid to Dependent Children) and others who may need it. The program would be on a voluntary or mandatory basis depending on individual circumstances.

The report notes that there has been a dramatic increase of 429 percent in violence crimes by those aged 10 to 17, from 1960 to 1990; teen pregnancies were up 200 percent from 1972 to 1990 with an increase in teen abortions of 286 percent from 1972 to 1990; ten suicides were up to 314 percent from 1960 to 1990. SAT scores were down 80 points from 1960 to 1992.

The report finds that "many of these factors can be attributed to the breakdown in the traditional family and of moral values which were so significant in making this nation great. Many suggest to these in-crises.

"Until such time as this present trend is reversed, no system will be able to effectively deal with the increase in crime this country will experience."

Councilmember John A. Baum said that he would like to see the detention home project speeded up. Councilmember Robert K. Dean questioned the rationale of taking someone with a child-like mentality and putting him in with hardened criminals.

Gardner explained that this is being done now but has to be done through the judicial process.

"We're talking about responsibility; we're talking about juvenile laws... They know they can do certain things up to the age of 18 and get away with them. If the age is lowered, they will know they can't."

Because of the inadequacies, Gardner said, children that should be in secure facilities are not there, and other children are on the streets that need to be somewhere, but not necessarily in secure facilities.

He said that the personnel available now is not sufficient to handle what they have now. "Nobody can go into these homes and do the things that have to be done."

Since funds for the juvenile program mostly come from the state and federal governments, Gardner said, citizens must make a concerted effort to convince legislators that money is needed.

Gardner likened the situation to having a Trojan horse in the city, spewing out all types of problems. If something isn't done now, said Gardner, "I hate to see where (this nation) will be in the next decades."

$141,600,000, but upgraded the proposal to $147,475,956.

School Board Chairman Samuel W. Meekins Jr. asked that school projects be funded from the city's general obligation bond authority rather than through referendums, but if necessary, he said, the school system is prepared to go to referendum.

Meekins said that the city has experienced healthy growth because of the quality of its schools; that more business has located here because of the schools. A few dollars should not be saved at the expense of education, he said, but the board recognizes the need for balance between quality and cost.

Meekins also said that council's perceptions is that the board does not do a good job of presenting its needs, that it comes forward with demands without the background information. He said that the board does not necessarily agree with that, but that in the future it will make an attempt to say why the funds are needed.

Councilmember Louis R. Jones wanted to know whether the city had enough charter bonds to meet the needs of the school system and whether, if the bonds are issued, the city could stay within the debt limit council set. He also wanted to know what impact the borrowing would have on the tax rate.

Budget Director Dean Block said that the city has enough charter bond authority to do all the school system wants, but the revenue stream is not sufficient to pay for the debt.

Before 1990, he said, the city faced the problem of having less charter bond authority than it needed, but starting in 1990 that situation changed. As a result of the 1986 and 1987 referenda, he said, the city found that the debt limit was growing faster while the basic revenues changed dramatically. The city learned that in the foreseeable future, it did not have the revenue stream to pay for more debt.

To meet all the School Board's requests, he said, some tax increase would be needed — from one to one-and-a-half cents beyond the 5.3 cents already approved. Jones figured it closer to 1.75 cents.

In lieu of a tax increase, Jones wanted to know where the city could find the money for the schools.

Block said that there was very little in the budget to reduce. Most of the road allocations represent the city's share of state projects. Also, he said, a lot of issues are based on school attendance growth projections. Actual growth and projections vary from 1 percent to 2.5 percent a year.

Superintendent of Schools Sidney J. Faucette said that while in the past the growth has been among the younger school children, at present, the growth at the high school level is 3 percent and for elementary students, 1 percent.

Spore pointed out that the city will be able to address the critical issues with the proposed budget. The allocations will provide for improvements at 10 elementary schools, which are 10 percent overcrowded; the crucial middle schools — Aragona, Princess Anne and Lynnhaven, and Kempsville and Princess Anne High Schools. The city can handle a $148 million budget with the 5.3 cent increase. He added there still might be a referendum to address other issues.

Colleges squawk; Wilder scoffs

smaller part of any decent professor's work. It found the average course load for full-time faculty in 1993 ranging from 1.94 courses at the University of Virginia to 4.59 courses at a typical community college.

The bottom line would seem to be that most full-time faculty at senior institutions are meeting class between six and nine hours a week in an academic year of some 30 weeks.

It's hard to make comparisons between schools as different as UVA and Eastern Shore Community College, but an increase of 25 percent in average faculty course load at senior colleges would not seem unreasonable.

Another bone of contention is the use of existing space. The evidence suggests that most schools are holding class mainly in the morning hours on weekdays and not much beyond.

The state council has warned laggards that those not using classrooms at least 40 hours a week can expect no funding for additional classroom construction.

But the real revolution will come when colleges are forced to operate on a three-semester year, encouraging students to complete their undergraduate education in one-fourth less time.

Still, there's no way a bunch of journalists or even state legislators can get to the bottom of this large issue and say with certainty what's right and what's wrong.

The next governor should employ a nationally recognized consulting firm to make an independent assessment of the use of existing space and time, to report by Dec. 1, 1994.

Court ruling favors Beach

Judge dismisses another suit over Gaston pipeline

The city of Virginia Beach has been notified that the Richmond Circuit Court has dismissed a lawsuit which claimed that a 1992 law allocating 60 million gallons of water a day from Lake Gaston to Virginia Beach violates the Virginia Constitution.

The suit was brought to the court by the Mecklenburg and Halifax County Boards of Supervisors. The court issued its ruling on Oct. 15.

In issuing the ruling, the court indicated the suit was moot, since on Sept. 17 the Supreme Court of Virginia ruled Virginia Beach was not required to obtain the consent of the counties to use storage in John H. Kerr Reservoir as a mitigation measure for the Lake Gaston Water Supply Project.

Mayor Meyera E. Oberndorf stated, "Although we predicted this outcome given the recent Supreme Court ruling, we are pleased to be successfully completing the final court cases on the Lake Gaston Project."

The city needs one final approval from the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) which licenses Lake Gaston. The approval is for an easement into Lake Gaston. It is anticipated that FERC will issue a decision in early 1994.

Magazine gives city schools high marks

By NANCY NACHMAN-HUNT

Virginia Beach public schools rank in the top third of schools nationwide, according to a study just released by Expansion Management magazine.

Virginia Beach schools earned a score of 119.6, better than 70 percent of all U.S. public school districts, on Expansion Management's third annual Education Quotient (EQ) index.

The EQ compares how school districts rate along seven education quality indicators against the range of all U.S. school districts. It provides a general overview of an area's schools for corporate executives considering new locations for their companies.

For its September/October issue, Expansion Management calculated EQs for 500 school districts that serve the United States' major business centers.

This year, for the first time, Expansion Management also published three EQ sub-indices: one that compares graduate quality, one that compares financial resources and one that compares the surrounding community's wealth.

An accompanying article describes how the EQ is calculated and how to interpret it. Copies of this article and the EQ ratings are available upon request.

Last year's EQ sparked useful public debate, having been reported on in more than 150 newspapers and discussed at school board meetings across the country. In 1994, Expansion Management will present the Education Quotient at the annual convention of the American Association of School Administrators.

Expansion Management is an international facilities planning and site-selection magazine, published seven times a year by New Hope Communications of Boulder, Colo.

Principal Perry Williams passed around the bucket of milk to show the Woodstock Elementary school children how much milk he was able to extract from Cathy the cow. The PTA board challenged the principal to milk a cow with the entire school as an audience if they were able to achieve 100 percent membership. One student shouted, "it looks like real milk!"

Pig-kissing principal keeps promise; has go as milkman

By CARLA ISAACSON

"I'd rather milk a cow than kiss a pig!" laughed Perry Williams, principal of Woodstock Elementary school on Providence Road in Virginia Beach.

Last year, the parent-teacher association wanted to challenge the students to get 100 percent membership in the PTA. The PTA board came up with the idea for Williams to kiss a pig if they achieved their goal.

The goal was achieved, and Williams kissed a pig in front of the student body.

This year, the membership drive for 100 percent involvement was achieved in just seven days, and the challenge was for him to milk a cow in front of students, teachers, and invited guests.

The children chanted, "Milk that cow! Milk that cow!" as they waited for the cow milking to commence.

Williams proved he could milk the cow, and then squirmed milk on Carol Bluestein, PTA president. Dale Manns, vice-president of PTA, received a squirt too.

"I think it's an innovative way to get the kids to get their parents involved with PTA," said Williams. "We would like to get everyone involved in PTA. Hopefully, they will continue to be involved."

Assistant principal Geoff Timlin set the tone for the day and dressed up in a cow costume. He greeted the children in the morning on the roof of the school in the costume.

"Cathy" the cow was provided by James Bergie from Bergie's Dairy.

We don't know what's in store for next year's membership drive, but Williams said, "I wouldn't want to kiss the cow."

Perry Williams smiled as the milk flowed steadily from the cow he was challenged to milk by the PTA board.

Negotiations for extra parking facility gains approval of council

The city plans to purchase a 2.3 acre site fronting on Pacific Avenue and Arctic Avenue at 25th Street for parking.

Virginia Beach Federal Savings Bank, which owns the property, offered to sell the property for $1.92 million; the city's appraisal placed the value of the property at $1.01 million.

Last week city council authorized City Manager James K. Spore to make an offer and if the offer was refused to institute condemnation proceedings.

Councilmember Linwood Branch said that parking at that location will provide oceanfront parking for Virginia Beach residents as well as visitors. He said that there was no better time to purchase property and that the additional parking should be available by the 1994 beach season.

The city has $150,000 available for the parking project and last week transferred an additional $860,000 from the 24th Street Park project and the Tourism Growth Investment Fund (TGIF) to cover the appraised value of the property.

Councilmember Robert L. Clyburn said that the city could not afford to "let an opportunity like this go by."

Council unanimously approved the project only after references to replacing the TGIF funds with 1993 Charter Bonds were removed from the fund transfer ordinance.

Councilmember Louis R. Jones pointed out that council has not resolved what it is going to do in the Capital Improvement Program regarding charter bonds. The school system earlier had requested council to use charter bonds for school construction projects instead of referendum bonds.

The applicants had originally requested 18 units, a plan that would have required a variance. Under current guidelines, based on a 1,740-foot road frontage, the property qualifies for 10 lots.

The applicants also are limited to constructing two units a year.

S. Faye Dorchester and Stanley W. Williamson have been granted conditional use permits to build a 12-unit subdivision on a 30-acre tract at Gum Bridge and Chari Neck Road in the Pungo Borough.

City Council recently split 7-4 for approval with Mayor Meyera Oberndorf and Councilmembers Nancy Parker, John D. Moss and Robert K. Dean dissenting.

Newly-hatched workshop dies

Council retires recent plan amid complaints after one try

By LEE CAHILL
Exclusive to The Virginia Beach Sun

City Council's one-month experiment with one-meeting-a-month workshops hasn't worked out.

Although the meeting plan was an outgrowth of "goals and objectives" set up at a City Council retreat, citizens don't like the idea of having one meeting less a month when they can't speak up on the agenda — the agenda consisted of workshops — and they definitely didn't like the idea of moving the workshops to the conference room when they would not be aired on the city's TV access channel.

City council members also were only lukewarm about the shift in the changes.

And so, council unanimously voted last week to go back to the old way with three regular meetings a month on Tuesdays — the first and second starting at 2 p.m. and the fourth starting at 6 p.m. — and workshops before the meetings or at other scheduled times.

The dumped plan had workshops scheduled on the first Tuesday with regular sessions on the remaining Tuesdays. Council tried it out this month with workshops on Oct. 5, but in the Council Chambers where the workshops were televised.

The workshops were not a complete disaster but they left some tempers a little frazzed — some members complained that other members talked too much.

Council decided to continue the experiment but to have the workshops in the conference room where the atmosphere would be more conducive to informal discussion, with no TV broadcasts.

The public did not like that.

Al Strazzuli, of Lynnhaven Colony, said that the trend is going backwards. Workshops were held in the conference room until two years ago.

He said there was no justification for the number of meetings to be reduced to two considering they were cut back to three (from four) four years ago. He said he hadn't heard of any cost reductions as a result of the move.

Council meetings, he said, are a great source of information for the public. He also did not like cutting out the TV broadcasts of the Board of Zoning Appeals. "I don't know what benefits there are in changing the system, he said.

For $18,000, the pay received by council members, said another speaker, Walter Erb, "I want you out here where I can watch you as much as I can."

He said that the council meetings are broadcast on Tuesdays and re-broadcast on Thursday, Friday and Saturday. Cut some of the council broadcasts," he suggested, and put the BZA hearings on.

On hearing about the popularity of the council broadcasts, Mayor Meyera Oberndorf remarked, "I guess we are a source of entertainment for some."

Said Councilmember Louis R. Jones, "The workshop doesn't appear to be working. I prefer ... going back to formal sessions of the last two years ... They are less controversial."

Crime Stoppers convention coming

Crime Stoppers International has chosen Virginia Beach as the site for its 15th annual convention in 1995.

According to Jim Ricketts, director of the Department of Convention and Visitor Development, Crime Stoppers International is expected to bring more than 1,000 visitors to Virginia Beach. Civilians, media, police officials, and their families from around the globe attended the 1993 Calgary convention, and the same turnout is anticipated for Virginia Beach.

The 1995 location was determined after five months of preparation and a presentation made by city officials during the Calgary convention.

"The purpose for holding this convention is to train and educate anyone involved in Crime Stoppers," says Jim Barnes, coordinator of Virginia Beach Crime Solvers, the local operation affiliated with Crime Stoppers. "Naturally, we're hoping people will come early to the area and stay late."

Family affair in school cafeteria

Second grader Christina Sobelli enjoyed lunch with her parents, Steve and Debbie, at North Landing Elementary School in Virginia Beach last week. Family togetherness was being promoted throughout the nation as schools celebrated National School Lunch Week. Although parents are usually welcome on a regular basis to have lunch with their children, one week is set aside to give recognition to the cafeteria workers. According to James Ratliff, Virginia Beach food services director, "This shows the parents that the cafeteria employees are professionals and take pride in their work."

The cost of illiteracy

My six-year-old son rushed through the door one afternoon last week and pushed a piece of paper into my face. "If I read five books, I can get a pizza!" he shouted.

Sure enough, Pizza Hut is once again encouraging children to read by rewarding them for their efforts with certificates for free personal pizzas. As my son chattered on about how many books he intends to read and how many pizzas he intends to earn, I found my thoughts straying to a recent report I'd read about literacy in America.

It fell upon Education Secretary Richard Riley, who was speaking for the Department of Education, to explain that of 26,000 people surveyed who were over the age of 16, one in every two showed low levels of literacy. Although Riley estimates that this could mean that approximately 40 million Americans cannot read a newspaper and understand what they are reading, the real cost of illiteracy is not so easily calculated.

I met Charlotte on a chilly February morning. She was out of breath from chasing her grandson down the street. Tiny — she couldn't have weighed more than 90 pounds — her face was lined with troubles I could not begin to understand. The tiny package of a grandmother was one of the most determined women I have ever met.

When Charlotte was in the third grade her mother became ill. Charlotte cut attending school so that she could take care of her brothers and sisters. She could read, but like many functionally illiterate people in the United States her reading skills limited her to understanding the difference between Cornflakes and Cheerios. She did not know how to read a newspaper. She did not drive a car because she could not understand the written driver's exam. When her grandson was to be registered for kindergarten she brought the lengthy forms to my home so that I could help her understand the difficult words.

Charlotte could not write a check, and had trouble understanding anything at all about banking. When her monthly Social Security check arrived each month she signed it and handed it over to her son who told her that he was putting it in a special account just for her. He would give her a few dollars spending money from time to time. She did not ask for more than this. She did not know how.

"All of my children made it through school," Charlotte told me one day. She had spent the morning sewing a mat for her grandson to take to school for using during nap time. "My grandbaby is going to make it through too. I'll see to that."

"What was it like when your kids were in school?" I asked. I could not imagine how this woman who had struggled with such difficulties had managed to get all of her kids through school.

"It was hard," Charlotte admitted. "Their father wasn't no help. He was sick most of the time. He worked when he could. We lived on welfare. We had a nice little house in a place where we all lived on welfare."

"Were the schools good?" I asked.

"Oh yes!" her face lit up. "I went to every program, every parent-teacher conference. I went sometimes just to be there to listen to the children read."

"You did?" I was surprised.

"Yep," she said proudly. "It helped me some too."

"Did you ever tell the teachers that reading is a problem for you?" I wanted to know.

"No," Charlotte said. She bowed her head. "I didn't want them to know. When the kids got older I still went to their parent-teacher conferences, but I didn't go to help out none."

"Your kids are all doing very well," I reminded her. "You must be very proud of that."

"I am," she brightened. "The one that lives here is in the Navy and repairs boat engines, my one daughter is in the Army, one of my sons owns his own business, and my other son is a preacher."

"You have a son who is a minister?" I thought I hadn't heard correctly.

"Yes," Charlotte laughed. "He tells people that I did that to him. When he didn't want to go to school I would always say, 'Do you want to be like me and your dad?' He went to school and now he's a preacher."

"If you could change anything about your life, what would it be?" I asked.

"My mama wouldn't have become sick and I would have stayed in school," Charlotte said.

"You feel that not getting a good education has caused you a lot of problems?"

"It cost me plenty," Charlotte said. "People don't know what it's like when you don't have it. Let me tell you, it cost me a lot." — S.T.

Naval community salute hailed as success by planners

Editor,
The Cradock Community's Salute to the United States Navy on its 218th birthday was a hearty success despite the inclement weather on Sunday, Oct. 10.

Loyal citizens were treated to a two-hour big band music concert performed by Portsmouth's own Just Us Big Band Orchestra by Leonard Barr. Greetings from the United States Navy and from Norfolk Naval Shipyard on behalf of the shipyard's commander, Admiral Select James Taylor, were delivered by Congressional and Public Affairs Officer, Steve Miller.

Boy Scout Troop 222 and Veterans of Foreign Wars 993 - Harold Treake Post, conducted a flag ceremony and were accompanied by Mary Jo Coley who sang the National Anthem.

Navy Loyalty Day was only one of Cradock's events held in 1993 celebrating their 75th anniversary. In 1918, the federal government chose the 310-acre Barclay Farm to establish a community to house the influx of Norfolk Naval Shipyard civilian and military personnel employed during World War I. Since then, Cradock has been home to many of the original established families as well as to the visiting military families.

Although Cradock has only been a part of Portsmouth's history for 75 years, Norfolk Naval Shipyard has been a significant element, if not the number one element, to the success of the surrounding communities for 226 years.

Cradock realizes the important role that it has played in Norfolk Naval Shipyard's mission and takes pride in its heritage. Cradock extends a warm welcome to all and looks forward to continue supporting the Norfolk Naval Shipyard and its employees in the future.

A note of commendation goes out to all those who made this salute possible, but especially to the Cradock Property Owners Civic League's Navy Loyalty Day Coordinator, Lisbeth Coker, and her committee, Dottie Wyatt and Joan Forehand, and to the Portsmouth city's Department of Leisure Services and their Cradock Branch coordinator, Dee Dee Strauss.

It's easy to understand FOP's support for George Allen

Editor,
I know why the Fraternal Order of Police withdrew its support from Mary Sue Terry and chose instead to back George Allen. They remembered the violence in southwest Virginia where our state police, while attempting to restore the peace, were fired upon, had rocks thrown at them, slashed and all manner of abuse hurled at them.

What did Mary Sue Terry do to support them? She turned her back on them, that's what. In the face of all this, Mary Sue Terry had the unmitigated gall to ask for and expect their support. What an affront to "Virginia's finest!"

City treasurer's innovations merit continued support

Editor,
This letter is in response to a Letter to the Editor which appeared in the Clipper. The writer is wrong when she stated taxpayers were locked out at 4 p.m. each day during the last week of decal season. As an employee of the treasurer's office, I want to set the record straight.

During the last few days prior to the decal deadline, which is Jan. 21, more than 900 people per day come to the treasurer's office to purchase their city decal. The treasurer's office opens early each morning and closes at approximately 5:30 or 5:45 p.m. each day. The lines are monitored at 4 or 4:30 each afternoon so that the taxpayers who are standing in line at this time are assured they will be sold their decal. Usually at 4 or 4:40 p.m., there is approximately 200 or more people in line.

We stay and see that they are taken care of. No one has ever been turned away who was in line at this time. Also, if the lines are moving quickly others are served. Barbara Carraway has elected to open her office early in the mornings to accommodate the crowds instead of staying later. Also, with the budget cut-backs, there is little money available for overtime and I do know of any employee who is willing to work late hours and not be paid.

I am reminded that the city of Norfolk closed their office at 5 p.m. sharp due to the same budget restrictions and the people in line in Norfolk were not helped. Whereas in Chesapeake, if you are in line, you are taken care of.

Carraway has extended the number of days decals can be purchased from 30 to 45 days. The City Code has always allowed decals could be sold as early as Dec. 15, but Mr. Flora, the former treasurer, for whatever reason, chose not to put them on sale until January. Therefore, Carraway has given the taxpayer 15 additional days to purchase their decal.

As an employee, I have watched the volume of work escalate during decal season. We are handling a heavier volume of work with the same amount of employees. This has been possible because of Carraway's innovative ideas and her ability to fully automate the treasurer's office. I am proud to be part of an office that is efficient, professional, organized and one that puts customer service first.

Campaign literature misinforming average citizen

Editor,
As a former employee of the Chesapeake City Treasurer's office, I would like to separate the fact and fiction in Barbara Carraway's campaign literature.

Fiction: Carraway required her staff to learn to use computers. Fact: The treasurer's office was already computerized and workers used computers daily in their work under Mr. Flora.

Fiction: Carraway claims to have lengthened the period for purchasing decals from 31 to 45 days. Fact: Decals went on sale in mid-December when Mr. Flora was treasurer. The "lengthened" period Carraway claims to have initiated was already in place under Mr. Flora.

Fiction: Carraway was responsible for implementing the zip + 4 system. Fact: This process is the responsibility of the departments assessing the bills — Real Estate and Commissioner of the Revenue.

The galling part of this is that the average taxpayer accepts these assertions as true. Unfortunately, this has become standard fare for local politics in Chesapeake.

Carraway has tried to paint a picture of having built a department from scratch when in fact she inherited a well-run and professional organization with high morale and low turnover. Mr. Flora had too much integrity to try to play such tricks with the citizens of Chesapeake.

I am supporting Jim Eaton for treasurer.

Customers come first for treasurer; vote has been earned

Editor,
Barbara Carraway, our city treasurer, has enhanced the customer service in the Chesapeake treasurer's office. She has been innovative in finding ways for us to pay our taxes, something we all have to do. We can now pay them by credit card or have them automatically debited on a monthly basis from our checking accounts.

In addition to paying taxes at the three treasurer's office locations, she has made it possible for us to pay our taxes at the Chesapeake Commerce Bank locations.

Another convenience we can thank her for is that

Barbara has also made it possible to purchase dog licenses at seven hardware stores throughout the different areas of the city.

To help the person working who finds it difficult to conduct business between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m., she has extended the hours of the treasurer's office on Thursdays from 8 a.m. to 5:45 p.m. When it comes to customer service, Barbara has done much to expand it to thoughtfully meet the needs of us, the Chesapeake citizens. Barbara has earned our vote on Nov. 2.

'Politics as usual' prompting one to vote for change

Editor,
The first victim of politics and war, it is said, is the truth. This is the case in the Chesapeake treasurer's race. Barbara Carraway's campaign literature states: "Expanded Western Branch Office." This project was part of the 1987 capital budget and was funded with 1988 bonds. Carraway became treasurer in 1990.

Recently, at a forum for candidates, Carraway stated that she was not for raising taxes as was the office of her opponent, James Eaton is on leave from the Commissioner of Revenue's office. Any high school government senior can tell you that only city council can propose a tax increase.

I am sure that Commissioner Ray Conner would be interested in finding out when he was voted with this power. City council members would be surprised to find that they had given it to him.

At a joint appearance with Eaton in Hickory, Carraway also stated that only one of her relatives worked in her office. It is my understanding that as many as four have been employed during her term. While this is really only "politics as usual," "politics as usual" will not get my vote on Nov. 2.

Carraway's literature also claims "no other candidate has the credentials she possesses." Jim Eaton has extensive government, professional, investment, military, management and teaching credentials. He will be an excellent treasurer.

Blow 'Taps' on seasons of discontent

For many years the song "Dixie" has been distasteful to many African-Americans. Those who do object to the song associate it with slavery and of that sorry time in the history of America.

Any caring, sensitive Caucasian-American should have no problem understanding that. However, "Dixie" has been sung for many years at political rallies and football games and it has nothing to do with slavery or hatred of African-Americans anymore than "We Shall Overcome" indicates hatred of Caucasian-Americans.

As a youngster in grammar school I was taught that President Lincoln, upon hearing that Lee had surrendered to Grant at Appomattox, with tears in his eyes requested that the northern military band play "Dixie" out of respect for those brave Confederate soldiers who had died on the battlefield for a lost cause.

Now perhaps the hatred and discontent over the song can be put to rest by the revelation made in a new book from Smithsonian Institution Press, which seeks to dispel the popular notion that the song was written by a white man.

The authors of the book "Way Up North in Dixie: A Black Family's Claim to the Confederate Anthem," Howard and Judith Sachs, believe that the song was written by the Snowden family of black musicians who taught the song to Dan Emmett, a white minstrel performer who many believe wrote the song.

The question has been asked why would a family of freed slaves like the Snowdens, who originally came from Maryland write, "Wish I Was In The Land of Cotton?" According to Sachs, chairman of the anthropology department at Kenyon College near Mount Vernon, the Snowdens were not lamenting slavery, but there was a strong sense of loss of family, tradition and culture.

To be in the north and be free was not a positive experience for all African-American families.

Now if it is true that "Dixie" was in fact written by an African-American, perhaps those who find it so offensive will at least take another view of it.

"Dixie" should not be used by those who are constantly looking for symbols to create hate and discontent among the races. We should love one another and ignore the symbols.

Welcome to the real world.

Yes, volunteers can make the difference

Volunteers make a difference in clubs, charities, churches, civic and community organizations. Few of these associations could carry out their goals without their assistance. Volunteers also make a difference as they donate their service to help the city of Virginia Beach carry out its missions.

Lil's Quill

One thing that markus as Americans is our willingness to help when we need it. We open our hearts and pockets in every crisis here or around the world. We also contribute to our own neighborhoods when we volunteer to work with city departments in providing many public services.

Last year, 5,000 individuals did this and their contribution was valued at more than $10 million.

While city volunteers are not paid in money, they receive intangible benefits for their services. Those of us who participate in volunteer efforts can attest to the sense of fulfillment that results from giving time and talents to worthy projects, knowing we've made a difference.

The former National Chair of Volunteers for the Red Cross emphasized the personal rewards which come from volunteerism: like the chance to do the things one does best; the opportunity to see the results of one's own work; the chance to make new friends; the chance to develop new skills and interests.

What else can offer a person all of these rewards in return for giving time and sharing talents?

We have a gold mine of potential volunteers in our city. Our large re-irement community consists of a multitude of persons who have retired from the military and have time, experience in many fields, and can afford to contribute to civic needs. It would be a pity to let the talents of former teachers, retired businessmen and other professionals go to waste. A "Volunteer Opportunities" list is published every two months by the city's Department of Human Resources, and is available in our public libraries and recreation centers.

Job vary from volunteer firefighter to reference aide at Central Library to administrative clerk in the sheriff's office to docent for the Francis Land House. You can find your own niche.

A few years ago, an inspiring story was told at a National Volunteer Conference about a wise old Indian chief and a determined young brave. Impatient to assume the leadership of his tribe, the brave challenged the chief to a test. If the chief failed, the brave figured tribal leaders would make him the new chief.

The brave, holding a small bird cuffed in his hand, confronted the chief. "Is the bird dead or alive?" If the chief said the bird was alive, the brave would squeeze his hands until the bird was dead. If he said the bird was dead, he would open his hands and the bird would fly free.

Either way, the chief would be seen as an old fool. But the wise old chief looked at the young Indian brave and said, "My son, the answer is in your hands."

Volunteers, like the Indian brave, you can make the difference. You hold the future in your hands!

The Virginia Beach Volunteer Council is always looking for more volunteers as it seeks to maintain, expand and improve city services. If you are willing to volunteer or would like more information, call the volunteer office at 427-4375 on Thursdays or Human Resources (Cecilia Blade) Monday through Friday at 427-4157.

Chesapeake Bay Mobile Marine Lab visits the area school classrooms

The Chesapeake Bay Mobile Marine Lab, an innovative educational program at the Virginia Marine Science Museum, is bringing the Chesapeake Bay alive for students throughout the Bay watershed.

Carrying live specimens in aquariums, preserved specimens, models and other artifacts, the 28-foot marine lab looks like a piece of the Bay to more than 30,000 students in Virginia, North Carolina, Delaware and Maryland last year.

The Mayor's Report

Mayor Meyers Oberdorf

Mayland last year.

On their school grounds, children watched a live puffer fish blow up to protect itself and felt the sandpaper-like skin of a nurse shark. They were able to touch a prehistoric-looking horseshoe crab and examine minute forms of sea life under a microscope. They could inspect a dolphin skull and the imposing jaws of a shark.

To provide a comprehensive extended learning experience, the museum's traveling teachers offer assembly programs, classroom mini-labs and truck tours. Program topics such as "Life in the Chesapeake Bay" can be geared to children from preschool to grade 12.

The marine lab is an important component of the museum's ongoing education programs which are offered to school children who visit the museum on field trips.

Although schools, especially those that cannot visit the museum because of financial or scheduling constraints, are the primary focus of the lab, it is also available for festivals and other events.

Three doors, one on the side and two at the rear, can accommodate a steady stream of people walking through the lab so large crowds can easily enjoy the exhibits.

This fabulous learning experience was made possible through the generosity of Checkerboard Motor Car Company and Isuzu Trucks of America, which donated the truck to the museum in 1992.

water can be changed during trips.

An on-board generator operates salt water filtration systems and keeps aquariums at the proper temperature to maintain the animals' health.

For children in land-locked communities who have never had the opportunity to visit the ocean, the Chesapeake Bay Mobile Marine Lab provides them with an up-close and personal glimpse into a world of wonder that many of us who are fortunate to live near the water sometimes take for granted.

But even in Virginia Beach, the traveling teachers don't have to go too far to find someone who's never seen a spider crab or sea urchin.

Throughout their programs on sea life, the museum's educators try to make their students aware of the problems facing our world's waters. Programs may focus on pollution and endangered marine animals — problems the Virginia Marine Science Museum hopes to help defeat through education.

With the resources of the Marine Lab, the museum is even closer to fulfilling its educational mission.

This week's Mayor's Report was submitted courtesy of Mindy Hughes, Virginia Marine Science Museum's administrative assistant.

Students in need of more classrooms

Will it be classrooms or trailers? This is the dilemma the School Board faces as we enter into our annual quest for classroom space, otherwise known as the Capital Improvement

The VB EA Report

Plan (CIP). On the school side, the CIP is a six year projection of which schools need classrooms added and which areas need schools built. It is based on current enrollment, projected enrollment, and how the classrooms will be used. CIP prognostication is obviously not an exact science.

However it appears that the city side has a much simpler method of assessing how many classrooms the School Board requires. Their solution is to take the number of students (actual and projected) divide that number by 25 or 30 and arrive at the needed number of classrooms. After checking how many classrooms are currently under roof, the remaining number requires either new construction or trailers.

The problem with the city's numbers is that they are not based on the needs of children. They don't take into account that Special Education classrooms require a very small student ratio, that art and music teachers also need rooms, and that some schools may be under-utilized because full capacity requires massive rezoning.

Because of how the School Board looks at the numbers and needs, they believe that they will need $38.9 million this year to continue their goal of reducing class size, providing art and music rooms, and reducing the number of trailers.

The City Manager proposed only $28.6 million in funding and hints that rezoning and more trailers should not be overlooked as viable solutions.

School Board members, at their Oct. 5 workshop, voted unanimously to reject the City Manager's proposal citing that $28.6 million was not enough money, that they had been promised $32.4 million in the agreement reached last year, and that the city had $90 million in charter bonds available to use making a tax referendum for schools unnecessary.

How much money will be available for schools will ultimately be decided by City Council as they weigh the city manager's proposal against the School Board's request. The first public hearing was held Oct. 12. Another hearing will be Nov. 9 with the final vote Nov. 23.

VB EA President Lisa Guthrie will speak in support of a more aggressive CIP. We must bring children off the parking lots and into the schools, we must get teachers off of stages and out of broom closets, and we must provide safe and secure learning environments for children if we truly want to make Virginia Beach a world class school system.

The "Haunted" Meadows Mansion provides the perfect setting for a frightfully ghoulish tour this Halloween.

Staff, residents of adult home going all out

By TERRY SCOTT
Exclusive to The Virginia Beach Sun

Towering above in the blackness of night, the gabled, English Tudor building seems frightfully imposing as the nervous visitors approach. They stand at the doorway, unsure whether to enter, when a loud shriek echoes from within. Then, pushing open the door and stepping inside, they move cautiously through the winding, darkened corridors of the huge country home estate.

Although the original inhabitants of the house have long since departed, their appearance is anticipated when the "Haunted" Meadows Mansion begins its fourth season of heart-stopping chills and eye-popping thrills next Thursday and Friday nights.

"Residents of the Hillhaven Facilities will serve as hosts for the evening when guests tour the ballroom, the billiard room, the haunted diner, and the graveyard," said Vicki Archer, spokesperson for Hillhaven.

"Among the many special effects will be a vampire appearing in the rafters, an operating room, a cold storage for bodies as well as a butcher in the morgue, and inmates that run amok in the mansion's insane asylum."

"Many of our (g)hosts will tour the eerie rooms of the facility, telling suspense stories and setting the mood for this holiday open house," Archer remarked.

"We will also be serving a special Halloween brew, along with other Halloween treats, and we welcome all ghouls and goblins, mummies and monsters."

"We would like to caution parents though," warned Diane Gowans, co-ordinator of the event, "that this event may not be suitable for children under 10 years of age. Some of the scenes we create are very graphic. We don't use real blood or chop up people, but not a whole lot is left to the imagination."

Gowans said that Hillhaven Nursing Facilities, established in 1947, is a national corporation that is the second largest provider of health care in the country.

"While there are no Alzheimer's cases here, all patients at Hillhaven are in need of nursing and/or rehabilitation," Gowans said. "Some may be here for the traditional long term care, but most cases are only here for a short time. Many are victims of a stroke or an accident and have no intention of staying long term. These patients have been referred to Hillhaven to begin rehabilitation, and to teach them to carry on with their every day lives."

Asked why the patients are involved in the "Haunted" Mansion program, Gowans explained, "Not getting that much interaction, they enjoy seeing people in the community, and appreciate the young people that participate. Also, they love the Halloween idea, with the costumes and dressing up."

The "Haunted" Meadows Mansion is located at 1724 Camelot Dr., in Virginia Beach. It opens Thursday at 6:30 p.m., and Friday at 7 p.m. A donation of $2 at the door is requested. For more information or to register, call the AHCare Home Maternal/Child Program at 427-0309.

Newborn child care class slated

Virginia Beach General Hospital will offer a newborn care class on Saturday, Oct. 23, 1993 from 9 a.m. to noon in the Green Run Medical Center, 3386 Holland Rd.

The newborn class is designed to assist parents in taking care of their new arrivals. The class covers umbilical cord care, bathing, circumcision care, bottlefeeding, diapers, stocking the medicine cabinet, infant safety and doctors' visits. A question and answer session will be held at the end of the class.

A fee is charged. For more information or to register, call the AHCare Home Maternal/Child Program at 427-0309.

Congress approves aid for farmers hit by drought

Virginia farmers, who sustained heavy losses as a result of this summer's drought, are now eligible to receive payments under disaster relief legislation passed by Congress in August.

"The important thing for farmers to realize is that they must apply for crop loss payments before March 4, 1994 for losses to their 1993 crops," said Clinton V. Turner, commissioner of the Virginia Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services.

Crop losses for most Virginia farmers will be the result of the drought. But they can also be from other weather conditions including floods, heat, wind, hail or tornadoes that damaged a 1993 crop."

To receive the payments, which are not loans but outright grants, farmers must apply to their local Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service (ASCS) office. Losses in both quality and quantity of production caused by abnormal weather conditions are covered under the 1993 Disaster Assistance Program, according to Donald A. Davis, acting state director of ASCS.

"Farmers should realize that no local disaster declaration is needed for this assistance. The payments are authorized by emergency disaster legislation signed by President Clinton," said Davis.

The criterion for determining how much money farmers may receive is based on crop insurance, Davis noted. Farmers whose 1993 crops are insured by the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation, will be eligible for payments for losses exceeding 35 percent of their normal production.

Farmers without insurance will be eligible for payments for losses greater than 40 percent of normal production. There is a limit of $100,000 per producer reimbursement limit.

In addition to compensation under the disaster relief legislation, Virginia farmers, who have crop insurance and are located in localities declared natural disaster areas by USDA, are also eligible to receive low interest loans.

Gov. Doug Wilder has received requests for disaster status as a result of the drought from 47

Virginia localities. To date, U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Mike Espy has approved the designation for 32 of these localities. With damage assessment reports completed on 40 of the 47 localities, Wilder has reported crop loss estimates in Virginia at more than $148.9 million.

According to Davis, ASCS offices are working overtime to handle the voluminous requests and inquiries from Virginia farmers seeking payments resulting from disaster relief legislation. "As farmers realize that crop payments are available, local ASCS offices are being swamped. And we want to respond quickly to help alleviate some of the hardship faced by Virginia farmers."

"The crop losses, which resulted from the drought and other weather factors such as hail and tornado damage sustained over the summer, are still mounting," noted Turner. "This assistance is badly needed so that our farmers can continue to provide the wholesome, abundant food that Virginians have come to rely on."

The summer of 1993 has gone on record as the second driest summer in Virginia since USDA began keeping agricultural statistics in 1891. The driest summer was in 1930. In addition, 1993 was the fourth hottest summer since agricultural statistics record keeping began.

Farmers seeking more information on drought relief payments should contact the local federal ASCS office which is listed under the U.S. Government in the telephone directory.

Portsmouth resident Charlotte Cromie tries to get to The Mackay Island National Wildlife Refuge as often as possible. Displaying part of her daily catch from a recent trip, Cromie plans on returning for more angling — plus a slot for the upcoming deer season.

Well-kept secret, refuge is finding more patrons

By SASHA TOMEY

Exclusive to The Virginia Beach Sun

Just about two miles across the Virginia State line and about 11 miles from Pungo on Princess Anne Road is one of Tidewater's best kept secrets, Mackay Island National Wildlife Refuge.

The nearly 8,000 acres of marsh and timberland provide a habitat for ducks, geese, swan, muskrat, nutria, river otter, white-tailed deer, gray squirrel, gray fox and raccoon.

During October and November it is the white-tailed deer that bring hunters to the refuge. Each year the refuge sets aside several days for both gun hunting, and archery hunting. Hunters must have taken a Hunter Safety Course and have a current North Carolina Hunting License.

In addition to providing maps listing standing sites for the hunters, and assistance to disabled hunters the staff is willing to help those new to the sport.

"We give a lot of advice," chuckled Ken Merritt, Mackay Island refuge manager. "We're going to bring along rubber boots. A lot of the areas where the deer can be found are wet."

Merritt was careful to explain that without population control the deer population in the refuge could not only present a serious problem for the plant life and other animals, but could present a problem to humans traveling through the refuge as well.

Deer forced to search for food near populated areas will often run into the path of an oncoming vehicle, sometimes shattering the windshield.

For hunters with a sentimental streak, Mackay Island offers a real glimpse into the past. Headquartered in what used to be an old hunting lodge, there are wildlife displays, a dramatic view of Currituck Sound from the veranda, and a large stone fireplace.

For Charlotte Cromie, a corpsman stationed at the Naval Hospital in Portsmouth, fishing at Mackay Island was the perfect way to spend her day off. She proudly pulled up the fish she'd caught. "We're going to cook these on the weekend," Cromie said.

I'm from Michigan," Cromie said. "I probably will come back during hunting season."

During the year the refuge offers wildlife conservation lectures, fishing, hiking trails, and hunting. The refuge office is open all year, Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m.

For more information about the upcoming deer hunt call 919-429-3100.

Funding plan hits snag by opponents

Exclusive to The Virginia Beach Sun

A legislative proposal for the 1994 General Assembly to relax the city's borrowing restrictions has already run into opposition.

Included in the city's legislative package presented at a council work session Tuesday is a request for a change in the city's charter to allow no more than $60 million in general obligation, tourism investment bonds without a referendum.

The bonds would be used for the Virginia Marine Science Museum, one of the projects currently scheduled for more expensive lease-revenue bonds, the hurricane protection project, and other small projects which are not fully self-supporting. TGFIF revenues could then be available to be used on a cash basis for other approved projects or for re-programming when TGFIF purposes are satisfied, according to the proposal.

Under the recommendation, the bonds would not be included in the calculation of debt amounts related to determine the city's general obligation debt limit and so would not increase the annual charter limit. The bonds would be a one-time bond for a specific purpose and would expire within a specified amount of time.

Councilmember John D. Moss said that the limits are placed on local spending to prevent spending without broad-based public support. "Why ask for more credit when we have credit we haven't used?" he asked.

The city is permitted by state law to issue $10 million a year in general obligation bonds without a referendum, plus the amount of debt retired each year.

Councilmember Linwood Branch said, "Because we have the capacity to take on debt I don't think the council or any future council will go off and incur debt."

Finance Director Patricia Phillips said that by issuing general obligation bonds, the city would save from $2 to $6 million.

Moss maintained that the city should ask only for the credit it needed. "If something else comes along, have a referendum."

City Manager James K. Spore said that he would put together a detailed calendar on the time frame required to borrow money — presumably with and without a referendum.

Councilmember Linwood Branch also asked that the staff prepare a complete study on past charter changes related to the city's borrowing authority.

Among other requests in the legislative package are:

□ $5 million to fund the construction of the expansion of the Marine Science Museum.

□ $800,000 or 80 percent of the cost of a lease for a 100,000 square-foot building for the Department of Social Services and the Department of Health.

□ $5 million for the Hurricane Protection and Erosion Control Project over the biennium. The project is estimated to cost $80 million with the city's share at 35 percent of this figure.

□ Continued full-funding of the Virginia Housing Partnership Fund which provides key funding for citywide housing and neighborhood improvements efforts.

Barnard leads VCU to victory

Virginia Commonwealth University soccer player Chris Barnard from Virginia Beach's Cox High School was instrumental in leading VCU to a 6-0 non-conference win over Maryland-Eastern Shore recently.

Barnard, a 5-8 sophomore forward, scored two goals and added an assist in the win over Maryland-

Eastern Shore. His goal at the 16:54 mark gave the Rams a 3-0 lead entering halftime, while he also scored the scoring at the 87:10 mark. Barnard's five points were his first points of the season.

Barnard has been one of the keys to the Rams' 10-3 start. He has appeared in all 13 games, starting nine.

Injured wildlife find friend at Beach

Vivian Garvey has been caring for wounded animals since nurturing a turtle at the age of 9

By SASHA TOMEY

Exclusive to The Virginia Beach Sun

The noise coming from the closet was like no sound the Garveys had ever heard. Startled, they sat for a moment and listened.

"I knew it, I just knew it!" Vivian told her children. "My grandmother always said if I didn't clean my closets, monsters would take up residence and now it's happened."

As her children ran to their own rooms to make sure they had not left a perfect nest for monsters in their closets, Vivian confronted the beast making the sound.

"Excuse me, Jurassic," she said loudly to the startled groundhog. "Am I getting in your way?"

The groundhog hustled back to its cage in the living room.

Having a groundhog in the closet is not unusual for Wildlife Rehabilitator Vivian Garvey. Presently she has Peppers, a goose and Jurassic the groundhog. Jurassic was named for the large rodent teeth that Garvey believes could chew through just about anything.

"I'm expecting a squirrel any day now," Garvey laughed. "I've been told it's neurotic."

Garvey, who is just one of the 101 wildlife rehabilitators in the Tidewater area is never quite sure what to expect when wildlife refuge managers call.

"When anybody finds an orphaned or injured animal they will usually call a wildlife refuge manager or a veterinarian who will then call a wildlife rehabilitator," Garvey explained. "The veterinarian binds the wounds and stitches the animal up," she said. Garvey then takes the animal to her home.

"I am basically a caretaker," she went on. She cleans the animals' wounds, gives them quiet safe places to rest and ferries them back and forth to the veterinarian if necessary.

Veterinarian Jack Cochrane at Strawbridge Animal Hospital often helps Garvey with her "critters" as she like to call them. "I probably shouldn't tell you this," she confides. "But he will often treat the wild animals for free."

Garvey was only 9 years old when she rescued a California desert tortoise that had been run over by a truck.

"Somehow I maneuvered that huge thing into a wagon and drug it home," Garvey said. When the turtle seemed to be feeling a bit better Garvey contacted Jungle Land, providers of animals to movie sets. "I thought they would have the best veterinarians," she said.

The Jungle Land animal handlers were impressed with Garvey's work. They told her that the tortoise should never have survived. When she became an adult Garvey became a registered wildlife rehabilitator so that she could continue doing what she loves.

Garvey, who enjoys a good laugh, feels that the animals give her more than enough comedic materials. She becomes very serious however when talking about her work. Like a foster parent Garvey loves and cares for the animals until they are well, but then must let them go. This is not easy for her children to accept.

"It takes total family dedication," Garvey said in a rare serious moment.

"My kids wanted to keep wild rabbits," she continued. "I told my son that he could pick one rabbit and keep it. He was delighted. Then I told him that he'd have to spend the rest of his life in his room."

When her son protested that this would be cruel because he needed to be outside riding his bicycle and playing with other children, Garvey made sure that he understood that the rabbits deserved to be set free so that they could live the way it wanted. Her son volunteered to go with her when the rabbits were to be released into the wild.

Garvey is also serious about rabies. "Rabies is a reality," she said quietly. "I love raccoons. They're smart, and you can show them something once and they've got it. But I have promised the refuge managers that I will not take any raccoons no matter who calls me. Rabies has just-infected too many of them."

Many wildlife rehabilitators are choosing to have a pre-inoculation for rabies. Garvey receives a shot every two years. "I don't want to take any chances," she says.

Books utilized differently in new teaching program

Kindergarten teacher Carol Floyd instructs her class in "Teaching through literature" a literature-based pilot program for Centerville Elementary School in Virginia Beach. Each week the children work in cooperative groups on a new piece of literature. This week it was the story "Sheep in a Jeep", the letter 'J', and the number '6'. Integrated in each story are lessons on math, science, social studies, health, and language. "The PTA gave us the money to purchase the big books/little books used to help us with our program," said Floyd. "We are tying the lessons to literature to make all the objectives we are trying to teach more meaningful. It makes reading a part of their life."

City's drainage woes caught in council whirlpool

By LEE CAHILL

Exclusive to The Virginia Beach Sun

The city's storm water management fee which became a fact on July 1 and already is slated to pay for numerous storm water drainage projects in the Capital Improvement Budget, continues to have its detractors.

Among them is Councilmember John D. Moss, who said Tuesday that he wanted the fee repealed, not amended.

Moss was referring to a legislative proposal of the city's — the list has not been endorsed by council yet — that requests the General Assembly to allow the city to include storm water fee bills in public utility statements which would mean, according to staff, savings of $300,000.

Supporters of the fee feel that the city does not have the money in the general fund to pay for all the needed storm drainage projects and would have to resort to borrowing more money — and the citizens would end up paying anyway.

Moss maintained that at one time the city had a source of revenue but chose to use that money for other things such as TGIF (Tourism Growth Investment Fund) and not for storm water projects.

Councilmember Linwood Branch said that the fee should be applied to state and federal property so that they can be allowed to participate in the cost of their mandates. The storm water fee came about to pay for the cost of federal mandates di-rected at managing rainfall runoff to reduce flooding and the degradation of the quality of receiving waters to the maximum extent practical.

In the budget workshop Tuesday, Public Works' John Herzke said that the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) provided no standards. "All we can do is develop data," he said.

The city's fee, $2.74 a month per residential unit, is the third highest in the six-city area with only Norfolk and Portsmouth charging higher fees.

Herzke said that the Capital Budget has 19 drainage projects that are funded and 18 unfunded. Of the 17 first-year projects, 12 are to improve the quality of the discharge and five are purely for drainage or quantitative. The stormwater backlog just contains $35 million of projects. The fees, he said, provide a reliable source.

Originally EPA identified 225 potentially harmful substances which should be removed from the discharge, but the number has since been reduced to 17.

"If we didn't have the fee what would we do?" asked Branch.

Dean Block, director of budget and management, said the city would have to use charter bonds which would imply costs in the operating budget to retire the loans as well as capital costs.

Herzke said, however, that with no standards, it's like having a moving target. "What do you pick as a standard — rainwater in Alaska or rainwater in Philadelphia?"

Moss maintained that the regulations mandated improving quality but only a small amount is being spent on water quality. He opposed spending money "in pursuit of a moving baseline ... We're having to invent the standards."

Sandbridge still not out of picture for new system

By LEE CAHILL

Exclusive to The Virginia Beach Sun

The Sandbridge sewer project, which was taken out of the Capital Improvement Program proposed for the next six years, is not dead yet.

Councilmember Paul J. Laneigne asked Tuesday at a budget workshop why the $16.8 million project was taken out of the budget.

City Manager James K. Spore said that removal of the item was done at his direction as the result of his interpretation of council's action in killing the Sandbridge Sand Replenishment Program. He did not think it wise to recommend the construction of sewer in that area. Councilmember Linwood Branch asked how the city proposed to remove septic tanks, which serve the area, in the event they are damaged by storms. Of the 1,421 lots in Sandbridge, 1,205 contain structures and all have septic tanks.

Public Utilities Director Clarence Warnstaff said that he was sure the city would respond after a devastating storm to protect the health and safety of the people.

Warnstaff said also that a public sewer could be placed deeper in the ground than septic tanks, but that the sewer, too, could be destroyed by storms. The cost of extending sewer to Sandbridge, he said, comes in at about $12,900 a lot on average, which includes gravity sewer and force mains.

The installation of sewer at Sandbridge, he said, would cost the city's sewer customers 75 cents a month over a three-year period. The estimated increase over three years, had been $2.25 a month but without Sandbridge, that increase would be reduced by approximately $1.50.

Excluding Sandbridge, Warnstaff said, the cost per lot of extending sewer service in areas already in the Capital Budget comes to $14,700 on average.

Branch maintained that "Just because we didn't get sand on Sandbridge doesn't apply to everything." He said that council needed a cost analysis. He said that council should look at the whole city while it's looking at Sandbridge.

Sandbridge is rated as a Category A health problem — the worst rating — because of failing septic systems with poor repair potential.

Record breaking summer

By LEE CAHILL

Exclusive to The Virginia Beach Sun

It was a great year for tourism at the beach. James Ricketts, tourism and convention director, and the city's advertising agency, Barker Campbell & Farley, took the good news to City Council reporting pluses in every category.

Inquiries jumped from 238,777 to 318,585, a 33 percent increase; hotel, restaurant, amusement and retail sales receipts reached record levels, and additional business plus strong average daily rates (plus eight percent) resulted in record-breaking hotel receipts.

Summer visitation surpassed all previous years, and while the occupancy rate rose only slightly, there was a solid increase in room nights occupied.

Credit was given to a stable market and visitor income, citing several examples:

■ Average family income was

45 percent above the national mean; ■ The Virginia Beach Vacation Guide;

■ Improved version of the $200 off Virginia Beach coupon book; ■ State co-op TV program;

■ Third party promotions — American Express;

■ The continued beautification effort;

■ Increases in private sector packaging and promotions — golf package;

■ Special events;

■ And great weather.

Mayor Meyers Oberndorf gave much of the credit to Ricketts and the ad agency.

The increases in hotels, restaurants and amusements alone, Ricketts said, will bring in more than $2 million in extra revenues.

And the other side of the coin, some of the businesses in the city which were reamanned at lower rates during hard times, are due for another reassessment upward.

For Governor

Folks love a good political fight, even though they sit around talking about how awful it is that they are fighting so dirty. And Virginia political observers hankering for bloodshed in the campaign for governor have not been disappointed. They have plenty to talk about. Mary Sue Terry and George Allen are in full quarrel — and it's nasty.

Well, we don't call them campaigns for nothing. This one has turned into a brawl. The two candidates have stumped the state from border to border hammering away at each other. They have competed head-to-head in three televised debates. But not one in a thousand Virginians has actually seen either of the candidates and not one in a thousand watched the debates. Instead, it is the television commercials people are seeing. That's not good. These 30-second spots often do grave damage to the truth and only clog the issues.

As the advertising clamor crescendos in the final days of the campaign, it is well to keep in mind the simple question: Which candidate is better for Virginia?

Mary Sue Terry offers herself as the candidate of trust. In one of the televised debates she used the word "trust" 10 times. George Allen calls himself the candidate of change. He says he will "embark on a new course of opportunity and promise for ourselves, for our families and for our children."

Mary Sue, sometimes referred to in Democratic circles as Chuck Robb in a skirt, needs more than trust to win this election. George, a fan of cowboy boots and snuff, makes more sense with his program to cut the costs and improve the performance of state government.

The ordinary voters, struggling with paying their bills and worrying about crime and drugs, are picking up on George Allen's things-to-do list. Gotta get more jobs. Gotta get better schools and safer neighborhoods. Gotta problem with government spending too much.

To the point, Allen says he will veto any increase in sales or income tax rates. More taxes will only feed the Richmond spending machine. Allen will shift the focus of education back to the basics. He says only 48 cents of every tax dollar spent on education makes it to the classroom in Virginia. His plan will direct more of each dollar into the classroom and away from central office bureaucracy. Throwing more money at the problem has not enhanced student achievement.

Three out of every four violent crimes in Virginia are committed by repeat offenders. Allen will seek legislation to keep prisoners behind bars and reduce lenient parole. And Allen says he will allow state police to investigate elected officials suspected of corruption or criminal activity, without approval of the governor or attorney general, as current law requires. He promises what he calls "an honest new generation of positive leadership."

Forget the negative television commercials. Look at the facts. It is George Allen who is in tune with the feelings of Virginia's majority. It is George Allen who should represent them as governor. — H.B.

Candidates sidestep state budget woes

Gov. Douglas Wilder and gubernatorial candidates George Allen and Mary Sue Terry are agreed on one thing: opposition to tax increases to get the state off the hook in what many see as continuing budget crunch. In May, state Sen. Hunter Andrews, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, warned of a shortfall in revenues to meet known commitments in the 1994-96 budget of $786 million.

Commonwealth Commentary

By Ray Garland, columnist

That assumed no new programs; no salary increases for state employees and teachers; no major construction projects other than highways; and no new federal mandates.

More recently, Wilder has operated on the assumption that cuts in some existing appropriations, such as higher education, would have to reach $500 million to close the gap between anticipated revenues and unavoidable costs in the biennial budget beginning July 1.

There is, of course, a legitimate question as to the reality of that $500-million deficit. The chairman of the House Finance Committee, Del. Dick Cranwell, has challenged Wilder's pessimism with claims that a reviving economy will close most if not all of the gap. That view is supported by the fact that growth in state revenues this year has exceeded estimates.

Economic scenarios are a dime a dozen, but a consensus is emerging that the country has turned a corner and can expect more robust growth.

A good leading indicator is help-wanted advertising in newspapers, which has increased substantially in all areas except New England and the Pacific Coast. But Credit Bank's recent quarterly index shows Virginia's economy lagging the nation, which may be a reflection of the state's sensitivity to cuts in defense.

That more pessimistic view would be supported by the staggering increase in the number of Virginia families receiving food stamps, which rose by 70 percent in the five years ending in May, 1993.

For what it's worth, my own reading of economic data says that Cranwell is more likely to be right than Wilder. For one thing, recent federal tax increases have taken the pressure off Congress to restrain the growth of spending.

We may now expect the entire Democratic leadership in Washington to do whatever it can to stimulate the economy leading into the '94 and '96 elections.

Despite the howls of protest that have greeted the Wilderian austerity, Virginia increased spending by 110 percent between 1984 and 1994 — from $7 billion to $14.7 billion. By comparison, federal spending in the same 10 years has grown by only 80 percent.

This is partially explained by the new congressional cunning of passing more costs through to the

Both were quick to change the subject. Terry kept falling back on "this campaign is about trust" while Allen said more than once that his first official act would be to name a panel of outside experts to examine state government from top to bottom with an eye to cost-cutting and streamlining.

Judging from what has been done routinely in private enterprise, a thorough management study of all operations of state government, if fully implemented, should save at least a billion a year.

But such studies are costly and controversial. A Gov. Allen might be unwilling to ask for enough money to do the job properly — or get it from the General Assembly even if he did ask.

And all major proposals changing the status quo are certain to be resisted by entrenched bureaucrats and their friends in the legislature. But this should be tested before Virginians are asked to pay substantially higher taxes.

In the context of a $16-billion budget for 1994-95, even relatively large tax increases don't seem to make a big difference. Raising the state sales tax from 4.5 cents to 5 cents would raise an additional $250 million.

Creating a new income-tax bracket of 6.75 percent (up from 5.75) for incomes in excess of $50,000 would bring in $175 million. Another four cents on a gallon of gasoline would get $140 million.

Increasing the maximum corporate income tax from six to seven percent would raise $50 million while another 75 cents on a carton of cigarettes would generate only $37 million.

It would be an interesting experiment to raise the lot and see if the tax consumers would be any happier at the end of the next governor's term. But they wouldn't and that can't happen.

Aside from increases in highway taxes, which both candidates have been careful not to rule out, the taxes we have now are the taxes we'll have when the next governor enters in 1998.

The challenge will be to show that state agencies and educators can make more efficient use of the vast resources already placed at their disposal, representing almost $2,500 a year for each citizen of the commonwealth.

The real world can be nice

Several months ago I vowed that this column would be somewhat tempered with some positive information as well as negative. While I intend to continue to tell it as I see it in the "Real World" from time to time to tell about some of the good things that are happening in Chesapeake, Virginia Beach and Portsmouth.

The Real World

By B.J. Sessions, columnist

I will not attempt to name the many wonderful organizations in all three cities that help the sick, poor, handicapped, elderly and many other causes because I would not want to overlook any of them, but I can and will seek out individuals who deserve recognition.

This week my subjects are Hazel and Dutch Hudson, members of the Brent-Lox Baptist Church in the Deep Creek section of Chesapeake. Hazel and Dutch have dedicated their lives to helping those less fortunate than themselves and I mean full-time.

Until a recent illness, Dutch served several terms on the board of deacons and as chairman. He presently serves as Outreach director for Sunday school, director of the Brotherhood, a mission for the men and secretary of the men's Sunday school class. He visits the sick in the hospitals and homes and sings in the choir.

He is also active in the Portsmouth

Dutch and Hazel Hudson

Baptist Association. Hazel teaches Sunday school, is director of the Women's Missionary Union, Mission Study chairman for W.M.U. and serves on the mission and ministry committee. She participates in Meals on Wheels and is in a group that ministers to the residents of the Brent-Lox Nursing Home.

I'm sure that there are many good and giving people in Chesapeake, Virginia Beach and Portsmouth like the Hudsons, but I'm not sure that they all get up each morning as Hazel and Dutch do and ask God to help them to help somebody that day.

Thank God for Hazel and Dutch Hudson and all the others who give so much of themselves to make life a little more tolerable for those who have to endure the hardships of life. Sometimes when it seems that the world is bigger than God, people like Hazel and Dutch Hudson help us realize that it is not.

"Verily I say unto you, inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Matthew 25:40.

Welcome to the real world.

Wolcott elected to leadership role with state Realtors group

Barbara Wolcott, vice president and general manager of Prudential Decker, Lynnhaven, has been elected first vice president of the Virginia Association of Realtors. The election took place at the recent VAR convention held at the Marriott in Norfolk. As co-chair of the Convention Committee, Wolcott was directly responsible for the success of this year's meeting.

"I'm very excited about the election and about serving the Realtors in the state level. I hope to expand the focus and involvement of local Realtors at the State Association through the education and legislative process," Wolcott says.

As a Realtor for 23 years, Wolcott has been extremely active in all levels of the association. She currently serves on the Board of Directors of the National Association of Realtors and was the president of the Tidewater Association of Realtors in 1986.

She has previously served the Tidewater Association of Realtors in many capacities including chairman of the RPAC and legislative committees, as well as the Awards Committee. In 1987 Wolcott received the Realtor Broker of the Year award. Wolcott has also been active in numerous community projects.

As the state level, Wolcott has been RPAC campaign chairman, and actively involved in the Board of Directors, Executive Committee, Awards, Convention and Legislative Committees, just to name a few.

As the 1994 First Vice President, Wolcott will be assisting in navigating the course of the state Realtor organization. She will also serve as the Strategic Planning Chairman which allows her ideas and commitment to influence the association for many years to come.

Wolcott states, "I firmly believe the association to be the voice of Realtors and the Realtors to be the voice of homeowners and private property rights."

Field leftovers feeding the hungry

By SASHA TOMEY

Exclusive to The Virginia Beach Sun

It was supposed to be a one-day adventure for Knotts Island resident Tyra Seals.

Seals who had heard about a need for gleaners to help harvest potatoes

Tyra Seals went to help a church group glean potatoes in the field and ended up spending the entire summer working with COPS, a program sponsored by the Virginia Beach Police Department and Chaplains. COPS donates household goods, clothing and food to needy families.

that were to be donated to a food-bank thought it might be interesting. What she saw when she arrived that first morning changed her entire summer.

Master Police Officer Ronald Michael "Mickey" Goss came up with the idea of a glean program after talking to a local farmer.

"He told me about all the produce he was going to throw away. I thought we could use this in all sorts of ways."

Pat Dribble, a neighbor, offered to help Goss organize volunteers. They collected produce into easily distributed bundles, and to help Goss realize his dream of providing for people who do not have enough food, clothing or basic furnishings.

With the cooperation of Pungo, Back Bay, Blackwater and Knotts Island farmers, COPS, a volunteer program sponsored by the Virginia Beach Police Department, chaplains and sheriffs organized volunteers into glean teams.

The gleaners went into the fields after the machines and farm workers had harvested crops. Gleaners came away with truck loads of tomatoes, potatoes, watermelon and blueberries which were donated to needy families through COPS and Foodbank of Southeastern Virginia which serves Hampton Roads.

In addition, COPS has been receiving donations of furniture, appliances and clothing, which are distributed from their thrift store at 125 South Plaza Tr. Seals not only helped in the fields, but also spent days sorting donations and helping with the record keeping.

"Most of our referrals come from Social Services," Seals explained.

"But we also have people who come to COPS from churches, or they have heard about us by word of mouth."

In addition to word-of-mouth referrals and those coming from Social Services, COPS has also received referrals from Volunteers of America Organizations, television reports and walk-ins.

Families with needs for services that cannot be met by COPS are referred to other agencies and organizations. In most cases COPS can supply clothing, necessary household goods and food.

It was Seals' idea to keep the pressure on her church friends and encourage them to volunteer. In the end the volunteers harvested enough food to make substantial donations to area food banks and COPS.

The worst part of the job, according to Seals were the last minute calls from farmers willing to donate food to COPS. All Seals had to do was arrange to get some trucks to the fields. With little notice Seals would dash to the telephone in an effort to contact anyone she knew who had a truck or a van that could be used to transport food.

"I'd call everybody I knew," Seals laughed. "We'd rush to the fields and get what we could."

One afternoon a call from Meigs' Farm in Pungo had Seals rushing to find trucks and volunteers willing to pick up sacks of potatoes.

"I ran out the front door and saw my neighbor," Seals laughed. "He said he couldn't do it, but his wife sure could. He went into the house and I didn't see either of them again because I had to jump in my van and go. I got to where I'd told them to meet me and she was already there."

Frank Jennings, pastor of Knotts Island United Methodist Church and a regular volunteer with the chaplains program with the Virginia Beach Police Department, expressed his surprise that the glean program was such a success.

"I've seen people propose these types of programs," he said. "The volunteers get tired, or busy and they just fade away. But this one just took off."

Jennings has a special reason to be proud of the volunteers efforts. Of the 40 Knotts Island volunteers recognized, more than half of them were children and teens from an own church.

Goss realized that the teens who volunteered in the fields were learning more than just how to harvest potatoes. "Some of them want to complain when their parents can't buy them that $200 pair of tennis shoes," Goss said.

COPS
Activities From April 21 to June 30, 1993:
Volunteer hours served	2,066
Households served	1,430
Temporarily unemployed	309
On public assistance	647
Employed / low income	282

"But this summer they learned that even though they might want something real bad, there's always somebody who has it a whole lot worse than they do."

Seals grinned when she talked about the best part of the job. When you knock on somebody's door and tell them that you have this produce for them and it isn't going to cost them anything — the looks on their faces is just . . . she stopped and tried to think of a word. "It makes it all worthwhile," she said.

Striped bass returned to citation list by tourney

For the first time since 1985, saltwater fishermen capturing a trophy-size striped bass will be able to earn recognition from the Virginia Saltwater Fishing Tournament.

During the open season this fall, anglers landing a striped bass weighing a minimum of 55 pounds will receive a citation plaque for their catch. Release citations, which were instituted last year, will continue to be offered for the catch and release of any striped bass with a minimum length of 44 inches.

The decision to restore the citation for striped bass was made at a special meeting of the program's tournament committee. The committee felt the continued growth of eastwide populations of striped bass justified its return to the list of species eligible for awards.

Citation awards for striped bass will be available only during the open season. Catches made on Thursdays, Fridays and Saturdays and Sundays from Oct. 28 through Dec. 19 will be eligible.

"We have restricted all striped bass awards, including release awards, to the open season only, so we do not provide an incentive to pursue these fish out-of-season," stated Tournament Director Claude Bain.

The closing date of the Virginia Saltwater Fishing Tournament has been extended to Dec. 19 to encompass all of the striped bass season. Citation applications for all 24 eligible species will be accepted through that date.

"The Tournament Committee opted for a 55 pound minimum on the striped bass citation for several reasons," explained Bain.

"First, that weight reflected the intent of the Marine Resources Commission and many of the anglers who spoke during the regulatory process to allow catches only for fish which were potential state or world record size.

Secondly, the minimum citation size had to be established at a level which would ensure all fish were at least 48 inches long. Our data indicated a 47 inch fish could weigh 50 pounds or slightly more, but virtually all fish in the 55 pound class would meet the 48 inch minimum legal size."

The availability of release citations ensures that all anglers who catch a large striped bass have a viable avenue for recognition of their catch with a plaque from the tournament.

Anglers should remember that all striped bass catches, including those registered for citations, must conform to current regulations.

For anglers seeking large fish this includes the 48 inch minimum size, and the requirement that fish be caught within the Chesapeake Bay, or its tributary rivers, or Virginia's Territorial Sea (ocean waters within three miles of the coast). Ocean waters under federal jurisdiction (3-200 miles off the coast) are closed to all striped bass fishing.

Jim Ryun, wearing No. 1, will lead the pack in this year's "Race With Jim Ryun and Family" to raise money for Regent University's Student Emergency Fund.

Celebrated long distance runner appearing in namesake event

The "Race With Jim Ryun and Family" enters its fifth year as one of the premier 5K runs in the Hampton Roads area and is scheduled for Saturday, Nov. 6 at Regent University in Virginia Beach. Sponsored by Freedom Ford, it will include the Commerce Bank 5K Open, Masters 5K, Genesis Mile Run, Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Virginia Mile Fitness Walk, and Kids Fun Run.

In celebration of its successful five years, The Indian River YMCA Family Fitness Fair is being added to this year's event. It will include health and fitness vendors, face painting, clowns, and complimentary beverages from Waffle House. Because there will be activities and races for all ages, runners are encouraged to bring their entire family

Ryun, who still holds the high school mile record, has been involved with the race since 1989 because he believes in the purpose behind the event, which is a fundraiser to benefit the Regent University Student Emergency Fund (SEF). SEF provides financial assistance to graduate students and their families who need assistance with food, medical bills, rent, and other related financial emergencies.

In addition to the run on Saturday, Ryun will participate in a sports medicine running clinic sponsored by Sentara Leigh Hospital on Friday, Nov. 5 at 7 p.m. at the Regent University Auditorium. Registration and packet pick up will also be available

Fees for the individual runs are $12 per runner/event if postmarked by Nov. 1, and $15 after. The Fitness Walk and Kid's Fun Run are free. There will also be a Ship N' Shore Military Challenge and corporate and military team competitions.

The race, a Tidewater Striders event, will offer prizes including ASICS Windward jackets, race awards, dinners on the Spirit of Norfolk, and more. Runners will also be eligible for door prizes including US Air round-trip tickets to Florida, Downtown Athletic Club memberships, a Schwinn Beach Cruiser bicycle and a weekend for two at Founders Inn.

State drug hotline rewards 22 callers

Colonel Carl R. Baker, Virginia State Police superintendent, has announced that 22 callers to the Virginia drug hotline have been approved by the Department of Criminal Justice Services hotline committee for cash awards ranging from $100 to $1,000.

The 22 cash awards amount to a total of $8,800 and reflect the arrest of 38 individuals on 68 charges including possessing, distributing and manufacturing drugs; fraudulently forging prescriptions; and violating firearms laws.

Narcotics seizures in these cases include marijuana, cocaine, crack cocaine, PCP and prescription drugs. Total value of the seized narcotics is estimated at $317,640. Also seized were four vehicles, $16,085 in currency and three weapons.

"These statistics show how well this hotline generates information to develop cases and how law enforcement agencies working together can make a difference," Baker said. Information developed is passed on to the local law enforcement agency in the jurisdiction where the activity occurred.

Callers numbers eligible for cash awards are as follows: 91-0262, 91-0358, 91-0714, 91-0929, 92-0531, 92-0552, 92-0837, 92-0916, 92-1023, 92-1099, 92-1147, 93-0025, 93-0063, 93-0122, 93-0220, 93-0414, 93-0518, 93-0551, 93-0622, 93-0623, 93-0659 and 93-0669. Awards must be claimed within one year.

There were 1,361 calls to the hotline from Jan. 1 to Oct. 1 which generated 814 cases. The total also reflects 291 call-backs with more information and 256 calls for assistance with drug problems or information on treatment programs.

The hotline was established Jan. 1, 1991 as part of Gov. Wilder's drug control strategy. The Virginia Criminal Intelligence Center houses the hotline and state police personnel staff it around the clock. The hotline generated 1,050 cases in 1991 and 1,073 in 1992.

imals inoculated against rabies. She also emphasized that children should be taught what to do when they come upon a stray, injured or wild animal.

"Parents need to tell their children not to touch any wild animal," Garvey stated. "They can telephone a veterinarian who will tell them what to do, or a wildlife refuge manager. But, do not touch the animals. You never know when one might be rabid."

Presently Garvey is trying to figure out how to teach Peepers the Goose to fly.

"Geese travel in family groups," she explained. "A flock of geese is made up of the Grandpa, Grandma, aunts and uncles, mom and dad.

This goose thinks we are its family. We don't fly so why should it?"

Peepers, who was born with a bad foot came to Garvey when it was only a few hours old. It could not keep up with the other goslings, so the mother abandoned it. Back Bay residents have been fascinated by the goose who thinks the Garveys are its family.

"Everywhere I go people ask, 'How's that crazy goose?'" Garvey laughed. "And as soon as my son gets home from school in the afternoon he rushes out to see the goose."

What will her son do when the goose learns to fly and can migrate with the rest of the geese?

"He will probably cry out of sheer joy," Garvey said quietly. "He knows it's for the best."

This premier tennis weekend will begin with the Tennis Auction Ball held Friday evening, Nov. 5 at the exquisite Norfolk Waterside Marriott. Dining, entertainment, and an incredible auction, will be the agenda for this black tie affair.

The competition begins with the Tennis Tournament held Saturday and Sunday, Nov. 6 and 7 at the Tidewater Tennis Center.

Beach native instrumental in win by VCU soccer club

Virginia Commonwealth University soccer player Chris Barnard from Virginia Beach's Cox High School was instrumental in leading VCU to a 6-0 non-conference win over Maryland-Eastern Shore recently.

Barnard, a 5-8 sophomore forward, scored two goals and added an assist in the win over Maryland-

Eastern Shore. His goal at the 16:54 mark gave the Rams a 3-0 lead entering halftime, while he also closed the scoring at the 87:10 mark. Barnard's five points were his first points of the season.
